YOU MAY SAY

"A Bird's a Bird," wherever you buy it. I don't gainsay that, but everyone knows there's a vast amount of difference in birds, and as it costs no more to keep a good one than a waster, it naturally follows that all sensible persons try to get the best. All birds sent out by me are guaranteed exactly as described, and are sent on approval entirely at my own risk, with the distinct understanding that unless purchasers are fully satisfied, they only have to return bird and I refund money in full. Can fairer terms be offered? Splendid large genuine Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and well on seed, 1/6 each, three 4/-, six 6/6 twelve 12s.; specially selected large birds to moult for exhibition or muling, 2/- each, three 5/-, six 8/6, or 16/- dozen; grand large cock brown Linnets, well on seed, and warranted all cocks, 8d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6, twelve 4/-; specially-selected exhibition cocks in song 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4s.; cock Greenfinches, three 1/-, six 1/6; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 2/-; cock Skylarks, in nest feather, 1/- and 1/6 each; hand-reared cock Larks in free song, 3/-, 4/-, and 5/- each; hand-reared Merlin Hawks, finger-tame, 5/- each; cock Goldfinch Mules in splendid song, 4/- and 5/- each; hen Canaries, 1/- and 1/6 each; Cages of every description in stock; dealers please send stamp for wholesale list of cages, it will save pounds. All birds are warranted well caged, properly on hard seed, and have been properly netted in County of Worcester, not the miserable little Irish specimens caught on birdlime. See following: "42, Croft-st., Bonhill, Scotland, August 18th.—Sir, Please send me three Goldfinches. I got one from you last year, and it turned out a champion, and has filled eggs with a Bullfinch hen. Yours, J. Brannan." "4, King Edward-ter., Tanfield Lea, Durham, August 19th.—Sir, Goldfinch arrived safe, and I am well pleased with it. Thanks for prompt attention. Yours, J. Nicholson." "14, Marine-ter., Skinningrove, August 20th. —Sir, Received six Linnets, and am well pleased with them. I got six from Lancs, and yours were far superior to them. Please send another six. I have just sold one of last lot for 2/3. Yours, C. Hart." Testimonials similar to above arriving by every post. Thousands open to inspection any time. Don't forget everything on approval; cage birds deposit system and money freely refunded if every satisfaction not given. See Appliance column for further advertisement.

A Real Live Question.

IS IT A BIRD YOU WANT?

If so, I will tell you what I am prepared to do. I have a large number of 1907 Birds and the Cocks are not yet in full song, but still I am prepared to guarantee the sex, and should by any chance the Bird not prove to be a Cock I will exchange any time between now and January 1st, 1908.

My Offer means that I will return your cash or send you a satisfactory Bird if the one sent fails to please.

1907 Birds.—Pure prize-bred Yorkshire Cocks, 4/-, 4/6, 5/6, 7/6, and 8/6; Hens, 2/-, 2/6, and 3/6; Pairs (Cock and Hen), 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, and 10/6. Travelling Cages are charged for, 3d. extra.

All Birds sent out for Cocks bear my stamp, which is my guarantee of sex, and all Birds bearing such stamp will be exchanged any time between now and January 1st, 1908. The above terms are an absolute safeguard against the well-known Hen Trick practised by others.

Yorkshire Cocks for the early shows at reasonable prices. All other Birds on my usual approval terms.

For full detailed Bird Price List send postcard, or on receipt of two penny stamps to cover postage, I will send my 106 page Catalogue, full of useful information, and should be in every birdroom.

THE SHOWS.

HEANOR.

This society held their show on August 12th, and the birds were staged in the tent, with the Poultry and Pigeons, but entries did not come up so well as expected. Mr. J. N. Harrison judged. NOR.: 1, Hunt; 3, Brentnall, clear yellow, good size and quality. NOR., unlighted (4): 1, Hunt and Brentnall, clear buff, good shape and quality, wins easily; 2, 3, R. Pender, 2nd yellow marked wing; 3rd clear yellow, two nice quality birds. CREST: 1, Colledge, clear body dark Crest, looks like making a good one. CREST-BRED (3): 1, 2, 3, Colledge, 1st clear buff, well lashed and good body, 2nd, buff, marked on head and neck, 3rd, marked head and wing, each nice, shapely birds, and well feathered. A.O.V. CANARY or MULE: 1, Hunt and Brentnall, dark Goldfinch, Mule, good blaze, nice colour. BRITISH (4): 1, Poole, with a nice Redstart, steady, good colour and marking; 2, 3, Bostock, 2nd Goldfinch, 3rd Greenfinch; 4, Hunt and Brentnall, Goldfinch. SELL 10/-: 1, Hunt and Brentnall, yellow Norwich.

HOLMFIRTH.

A couple of classes were provided for cage birds in connection with the Holmfirth Agricultural and Horticultural Show, on August 17th Mr. C. R. Hampshire judged. CANARY A.V.: 1 and 3, Holmes, smart upstanding yellow Yorkie, and buff Yorkshire, rather stout; 2, Bray, colour-fed yellow Norwich, trifle long; vhc and he, Smith; c, Charlesworth. BRITISH A.V.: 1 and 3, Roberts.

PARTICK.

The Partick and District Cage Bird Club held their show of young Canaries in the Joiner's Hall, Partick, on Aug. 10th. A fair turn out of birds was seen and the quality was very good although a few were broken in the moult; 60 birds were staged. Mr. G. Smart, of the West of Scotland Club, judged, and his awards were well received. CRESTS, 1 and spl., Henry. PLAINHEADS CLEAR YELL.: 1, Graham; 2, Gow; 3, Miller; 4, and 7, Kidd; 5, McRobbie; 6, Sanderson. CLEAR BUFF: 1 and 3, spl., Sanderson; 2, 4, and 7, and spl. YORKSHIRES: 1, Wilson; 2, 3, and spl., McRobbie. A. O. VARIETY: 1 and spl., 2, 3, Hamilton.

BATHEASTON.

The above fixture was held in connection with the Horticultural Show on August 15th. The cage birds were capitally well staged in the Poultry Tent, and made a very pretty attractive show, the birds being much admired by the visitors to this charming place of lovely scenery, which is situated at the far end of Bath, but happily the electric tram takes one to the gates, where the show is held, for the modest sum of threepence. Mr. W. L. Langley judged, and his awards were well endorsed. CANARY AV.: 1, Crane, very typical, nice quality of feather, buff Norwich hen, true Bullfinch type, good chest and head, short in flights and tail, well staged, wins easy; 2, Follwell, capital buff Yorkie, nice length and well drawn good bead and wings, nice quality of feather; 3, Follwell, yellow Norwich, good colour and size, bit long in tail and flights; res., Follwell; hc, Crane. BRITISH A.V.: 1, Mead, topping good Goldfinch, very rich in tannings, capital buttons, good ruby blaze, trifle on the small side, still wins; 2, Jones, another Goldie, better type of body but not so rich in blaze or tannings; no 3rd awarded; res., Fellows, another Finch, paler in colour, but good in blaze. FOREIGN A.V.: 1, Miss Williams, good Amazon, in rare bloom and feather; 2, Miss Fishlock, nice Malabar, nice blood, wing markings, good neck ring; res., Lavington, fair Amazon. LOCAL CANARY A.V.: 1, 2, vhc, Follwell, all Norwich, winner buff, marked head and wings, good size, bit loose in feather behind; 2, nice clear buff, good stamp.

SHILDON.

This show was held in connection with the Industrial exhibition on August 17th, but the entry was not at all good. NORWICH PLAINHEAD (5): 1, vhc, Wilson; 2, 3, A. Stanger; c, Aters. CRESTBRED (6): 1, Miss Stanger; 2, Taylor and Smart; 3, vhc, Aters. CREST (1): 2, Webb and Horton. YORKSHIRE (9): 1, 2, Carter; 3, Rutherford and Bright; vhc, Wilcock; hc, Stickland; c, Pigg. A.O.V. (7): 1, 2, Todd and Son; 3, Davidson and Boyd; vhc, Rutherford and Bright; c, Miss Stanger. PAIRS OF CANARIES FOR BREEDING (4): 1, A. Stanger; 2, Taylor and Smart; 3, Wilson; vhc, Cooper. BRIT. A.V. (11): 1, Cooper; 2, hc, Davidson and Boyd; 3, Miss Stanger; vhc, c, Rutherford and Bright. SELL. 10s. (7): 1, 3, Wilson; 2, Webb and Horton; vhc, A. Stanger. SELL. 7/6 (6): 1, Davidson and Boyd; 2, Miss Stanger; 3, Rutherford and Bright; vhc, Wilcock; hc, Livesay and Ainsworth; c, Wilson. Mr. Gray judged, and his awards were well received by the fanciers present.

CLUB REPORTS.

THE ORIGINAL CROOK C.B. & R.S.

At the monthly meeting of the above society on August 7th, Mr. George Sweet, of Willington, gave a very instructive and entertaining exhibition in the art of bird washing. There was a capital attendance of members, and the exhibition was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Six birds were washed, five by Mr. Sweet, and one by Mr. Messenger. Mr. Sweet went into every detail so clearly that one of the biggest novices present was able to wash a bird before leaving the meeting. All present joined in passing Mr. G. Sweet a vote of thanks for the able manner he had instructed them. It was decided to give two valuable Cups for members' classes at our Open Show.

A. Bowes, Sec.

GLASGOW & WESTERN COUNTIES N.C.M.B.F.B.C.

Committee meeting held on Saturday last. Mr. Peter Pettigrew presided over a good turn-out. It was decided to alter date of next meeting to Saturday, 14th September, at 6 p.m., the original date being Glasgow Trades Holiday. It was also decided to hold a first feather show for young mules and hybrids on same date, viz., 16th September, when the following classes were decided upon. 1, Light Mule or Hybrid; 2, Dark Linnet or Dark Goldfinch Mules; 3, any other variety Dark Mules. Ramble off, owing to the members taking advantage of the various cheap trips on Trades Holiday. Members will do the Committee a good turn by bringing as many birds as they can to first feather Mule Show.

J. H. Adam, Sec.

HAMILTON CADZOW OAK O.S.

A meeting was held on August 3rd, the President, Mr. William Shearer, in the chair. The secretary read the acceptance of the following gentlemen who will judge at our Open Show, December 14th, and their respective sections: Norwich Plainheads 9 classes, Crest 2, judge Mr. J. Sandison, Aberdeen; Border Fancies, 14 classes, judges, Messrs. J. Smillie, Kilmarnock, and William Haddon, Hamilton; Mules, British and Foreign 21 classes, judge Mr. P. Pettigrew, Glasgow, and Mr. R. Farmer, hon. sec. of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club, Edinburgh.

R. Gadsden, Sec.

HUDDERSFIELD O.S.

Mr. W. A. Cowgill, of Bradford, gave a lecture to the members of the above society on Monday, August 12th, at the headquarters, the White Hart Hotel. Subject: Moulting and colour feeding of Canaries. The lecture was very instructive and highly appreciated by all present. A lively discussion followed, and a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.

S. Lodge, hon. sec.

THE POTTERIES & DISTRICT C.B.A

An important meeting of the Potteries and District C.B.A. was held on Saturday, August 17th when it was decided to enlarge the Yorkshire classification for the Open Show, and to engage an extra judge. Mr. F. Bate, the well-known Yorkshire exhibitor, has been asked, and has agreed to accept the position. Mr. Bate will judge the Yorkshires only, Mr. W. Vardy taking all others.

J. Sincock, secretary.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

A Committee Meeting, held 7th inst., to definitely settle the classification for our forthcoming show. There is to be 73 classes for open competition, 32 for members, including 10 for novice members, for which our esteemed president A. J. Haggie, Esq., is giving a £2 2s. special. W. J. Taylor, Esq., of Millburn House, sent a valuable tea and coffee service per Mr. Jas. Thompson, to be held by the Newcastle Society's' secretaries, until the end of the show season. It is to be presented to the exhibitor who wins the most points either in open or members' classes at all the following societies' shows, viz.:—Newcastle, Blaydon, So. Shields, Wallsend, Sunderland, and Gateshead; there is also a pair of bronze figures for the runner-up, and 10/- for the one who gets third. We are sure that the secretaries of the societies mentioned will join us in publicly thanking Mr. Taylor for what he is doing for the Fancy; would that there were some more like him. We may further state that we have got the patronage of eight specialist clubs; so for a young society we are looking all right. There are some good specials promised, as last year, so hurry up you fanciers, and get your birds through the moult for the coming Show.

IN THE COURTS.

PLYMOUTH GENTLEMAN'S UNJUSTIFIABLE ACT.

At the Camelford County Court on August 15th, Benjamin Beasley, a coastguard pensioner of Boscastle, claimed £1 from Mr. R. W. Fox-Male, 1, Carlisle-terrace, The Hoe, Plymouth, the value of a skylark, alleged to have been liberated by the defendant.

The plaintiff stated that he added to his pension by bird fancying. In fine weather he kept a lark (which he had in his possession three years) in the porch of his house. Returning from church on Sunday, June 9th, he found the bird missing, and thinking it had been stolen, acquainted P.C. Andrew. When they passed plaintiff's house in the afternoon the defendant and another person laughed and pointed to the empty cage. Later defendant admitted that he liberated the bird, and said it was not the first time he had liberated a bird.

The defendant, in court, said his reason was obvious, and one which would be appreciated by all those who were fond of birds and animals. He had always considered it a brutal thing to keep a wild bird in a cage. For trespassing on this man's preserves he offered 10s., which he considered quite sufficient. When Mr. Beasley refused to take anything less than 20s., he thought it advisable to allow his Honour to settle the matter.

Judge Granger said what the defendant had done was perfectly unjustifiable, however much he might object to seeing wild birds caged. It was an illegal act, which he hoped the defendant would not do again. Judgment for plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

A BLIND BENGALEE.

Visitors to the small bird house at the Zoo often pass by a cage containing a pair of white Bengalees without knowing what a curiosity one of them is. The fact is, that the poor little thing—which may be distinguished from its mate by lacking a tail—is blind, and yet finds its way about, to feed, drink, and roost, and has done for some time. What makes this more wonderful is that the bird previously inhabited another cage with the perches placed quite differently, and has had to learn its way about this one.

The Robin.

Whilst staying at my grandmother's at Whitby I was greatly surprised when a Robin came into the house, staying for some weeks. He would fly from picture to picture, and pecking at every eatable on the table, sometimes alighting on a jam tart. He is quite happy in his new home; when the warm weather comes he will probably go back to the woods.—Sent by Florrie Hill (age 9), 18, Rugburn Street, West Hartlepool.

My Experiences with the Yorkshire Canary.

NATURAL ABILITY SCORES.

Strange though it may seem, some men make better fanciers than others. They have the natural ability. A man, however keen he may be, however persevering, without he has the natural ability his efforts are often in vain. How often do we find these differences in the staging of the birds. To one fancier washing becomes very easy, and in a very short time. he can stage his birds with the best Another man can try time after time and get no better result. The same with pairing, training, etc. To some fanciers it all comes naturally, and that is the reason why we see what I may term the lightning success of certain breeders. I would not advise the novice to experiment without he has a specific object in view. If you buy off fanciers who have the present day winning type in their studs, you will not find any need to double buff, double yellow, etc. I would also advise novices to buy off fanciers close to their home. That is to say if there are any good studs close at home. In fact five shillings in railway fare is often well spent by going to a breeder's room of some standing. You can, in such instances, trace the ancestry of your birds back some six or seven generations with ease. I will give an instance. At the lecture recently given by Mr. Crisp before the members of the L.C.B.A., a member present asked a question respecting a bird he had off Mr. Crisp. Mr. Crisp at once replied, and traced the bird back two or three generations, the value of which for future pairing must be apparent to anyone. So you see, although you may be only established a breeder two or three years, you are in the happy position of being able to trace your birds back for twice that time providing you know where they come from. In such cases you can, by getting a little fresh blood each year from the same source, keep the good points in your stud, and by the time you think an outcross advantageous, you have educated yourself sufficiently to buy on sight. This is where I maintain the novice has the advantage by confiding himself at the commencement to one or two studs. This is where the Yorkshire fanciers in Yorkshire have the pull over us Southerners. They are all confined in a small radius, they can pop into one another's rooms, the birds are known to them, and they can get birds at any time in any number possessing any specific object required.

Some short time back I had a discussion in one of the fancy papers about the influence exercised from the maternal and paternal sides. This was brought about by my close observations during the late show season. I found on the show bench in the hen classes small puny hens ranging from 5¾ inches to 6 inches, all told, admitted they were full of type and quality, and by the side of these I found a few topping hens as well up in length as the cocks, and carrying the same length of flight as the latter. On turning to the catalogue I invariably found these were put down by the Yorkshire men or the older champion Southern exhibitors. I said nothing to anyone, but I reasoned with myself, and I came to the conclusion that we were losing size through the hen. It stands to reason the smaller you have the hen, the larger you must have the cock. Where are our novices in London who have 7 to 7¼ inch cocks in their rooms, birds of type and quality? I venture to say that the novices in London alone who possess 7¼ inch show birds can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and why should not the hen have the same, or nearly the same, influence in maintaining size as the cock.

THE QUESTION OF SIZE

If the hen is capable of exercising influence in fixing other properties, why should she lack this one specific object of influencing size in the progeny? I have seen standard length birds bred from a small cock and large hen, and I have seen small birds bred from a 7 inch cock and a small hen. I say, if you get a medium sized pair of birds, say 6½ inch, or if you can get them 6¾ inch, you stand a much better chance of getting young of even size, quality, and type. Mr. Broadley, in his work, strongly advocates this, and so do other authorities on the variety. Some say you may get larger young ones from small parents. This again, to a great extent, is said with an ulterior motive. If you haven't size in front of you to breed from, it is a certainty you will not get it from inheritance. You may in isolated cases breed birds larger than their parents, but these are purely exceptions. It must be exceptional, because here again it is only reversion struggling against evolution. The common ancestor being the small Serin Finch, a bird the size of a sparrow. The same thing applies vice versa. What is the greatest struggle breeders of Pomeramians and other toy breeds of dogs have to contend against? Getting them too large? Why is this? Why have they that innate tendency to become heavier and larger? Because their ancestors were large dogs. Take our own case. We average, as a rule, between 5 feet 4 inches and 5 feet 10 inches adult males, and there is our struggle to keep this average. Take the Hottentot, the Eskimo, and other races of small stature. They have no struggle in keeping their standard size; it is natural to them. With breeders of fancy stock it is otherwise. This question of size being such an important part in the Yorkshire, I have dwelt on it at some length, and I advise all you novices to keep up your size. At the same time do not lose your type and quality. You can lose size quicker than the other two features, type and quality, and once lost, it takes years to recover.

SIZE A DETERMINING FACTOR.

Still size is not everything, but it is often the determining factor between winning and losing. A bird which has the extra bit of length just does the trick, and rightly so. Some judges do not take size into consideration at all, because when breeding themselves they could not get size and length, they think it is not a necessary adjunct. It becomes necessary, when showing, to study your judges, and this is also where it is advantageous to visit various shows, where different judges are adjudicating on the birds. It is no use reading what they say; go and see what they do, and in a fair good stud of birds there are sure to be one or two to suit the different opinions. When you find a judge who likes your stamp of bird, and you win under him in good company, stick to him like glue, follow him round the shows, never mind the counter attraction of other shows, follow the judge who serves you best.

NORTH v. SOUTH.

I will just summarise a few of the points I have raised, and then bring my paper to a close. I spoke just now of the Yorkshiremen outclassing us down here. Perhaps some of you are wondering where? I consider the Yorkshiremen beat us in three things, and they are breed, staging, and high condition. The Yorkshiremen have brought the breeding of their best birds to a science. Take a first class bird bred in Yorkshire. He possesses breed so intermingled that it does not interfere with his symmetrical proportion in the slightest degree. Often in the South breedy birds are bred, but their shoulders are too pronounced, or they are inclined to hook a little, and this, of course, spoils the outline of the bird. What proportion of Belgian blood their birds possess, and how it is used, is a question that will take some answering. It is a secret well kept, and I do not blame them for keeping it. As regards staging, here again they beat us. I am told in and around Yorkshire the water is very soft indeed, and this no doubt plays a most important part in the staging of the birds. The third item, high condition, is a thing that a lot of our Southern fanciers can improve upon. I often marvel to hear of some of the Northern birds being shown perhaps 12 to 15 times in all parts of the country, then finishing up at the Palace often with a win, in the best of condition, and as fresh as paint. We are told not to overshow our birds. I have difficulty enough in keeping mine in show form all through the winter. The fancier who keeps his show birds proud during the show season stands a much better chance. They come through the wash better, and stand the railway journeys a lot better. Good nourishing food should be given them, and tonics should also be provided from time to time in the drinking water. Great care should be taken that only birds thoroughly fit should be sent out, as if a bird is a little queer at home, it is a certainty a long journey by rail and a draughty hall will not improve him.

(To be continued.)

Three perfectly pure white Blackbirds have been hatched in our garden hedge this year, writes "S.C.E." (Melrose, Scotland), to a daily contemporary, one in May and two in July, in the same nest, and from the same parent birds. The remaining chicks were like the parents, the ordinary pure Blackbird. I am glad to say they have, so far, been left untouched by gun or boy.

A MULE BREEDING THEORY TESTED.

Why and Where Did We Fail?

SIR,—I was much interested in a recent issue of CAGE BIRDS, to read that four light Mules had been produced in one nest. Whilst congratulating the breeder on such a fortunate occurrence, I could not help thinking that, interesting as are these bare recording of facts from time to time in our paper CAGE BIRDS, how much more interesting would they be if the writers opened out a little, as it were, and say in a case of the breeding of a light Mule, let readers know to what extent they (the breeders) are willing to credit themselves for such, beyond the mere fact of pairing up the parents, and the successful rearing of the Mule. It would be interesting to learn, say that such and such a Mule came about in quite a commonplace manner, an ordinary Goldfinch was paired to quite an ordinary Canary, and lo, a beautiful light Mule. Or, again, we read, that Mr. So-and-So attributes his success to the fact, that he has inbred his Canaries for twenty years. Then, again, the announcement of another light Mule is followed by the breeder assuring us that his success was only brought about by allowing the hen to become infested with red-mite, which are then devoured by the Goldfinch, who, in time, becomes so charged with Canary blood, that "Hey! Presto!" nothing more simple, readers. Again the sight influence theory might account for another grand Mule, or the using of a Pea-throat Goldfinch, or a Cheveral, or, perhaps, an Albino. Then our eyes open a little wider as we read that Mr. So-and-So has accomplished wonders in the land of light Mules, because he has the common sense to use only one Goldfinch; running him with hen after hen, till his vigour has been so worn down, that the Canary nature at last triumphs over that of the Goldfinch, and again, in the words of the conjurer, "Nothing more simple, gentlemen!" My partner, a Mule breeder of several years' experience, has learned this last two or three years to the last-mentioned theory, viz., that of only using one Goldfinch (personally, I blame Mr. Weston for it), and the results up to date, may, perhaps, be of interest. During the season of 1905, an unflighted hen was tried with the Goldfinch, and out of a total number of seven Mules bred from this hen, five were marked, varying from a white patch the size of a shilling on one, to the quite half and half stage on others. This was considered good enough for another trial in 1907, and this season saw this hen, which we will term No. 1, accompanied with her own nest sister, No. 2, and a large clear Yellow hen, the daughter of No. 2, which is No. 3. The Goldfinch which had been used during 1906 was sold to a fellow-fancier, and was paired by him this season to a common-looking hen of a decided German cast. However, another likely breeder was selected from the stock of Finches, and the three hens were soon sitting on their first round of eggs, all of which, however, proved clear. For the second round a large, vigorons, field-moulted Goldfinch was tried, one that was feeling his feet, and answering the hens with that swagger that pleases the Mule breeder. No. 1 hen was first to nest, then No. 2, and lastly No. 3. In the meanwhile we had paid a visit to our fellow-breeder, and found his first round of Mules had resulted in two, and both were varicgated. At this point the theory which was going to be tried for all it was worth, received somewhat of a check. Under the system of wearing the Goldfinch down, you could hardly expect the best results in the early rounds, yet here was our friend with a couple of tidy Mules in his first round, which looked, to say the least, as if the Finch had something strong to say in the matter, in a way other than that of wearing him down, especially when we reflected on the many marked Mules he had served when in our possession. However, to get back to our second round, No. 1 hatched three, No. 2 hatched two, and No. 3 hatched four. These were all duly reared, resulting in not one of them being a true dark Mule. Those bred from Nos. 1 and 2, were of the common garden variety, marked here and there, just enough, as I tell my partner, to spoil 'em. The four Mules bred from No. 3 exceeded all expectations. To call any one of them variegated would hardly convey a true meaning—lightly marked is, perhaps, a better term. Here, again, our theory seemed to get a shaking. A field moulted Finch, and had sired a nest like this, at only the third time of asking! What was our chance worth by the time the Finch came to No. 3 hen again? I must confess that at this stage I showed more interest in Mule breeding than was usually my wont, even my partner seemed to show a sort of treatment to No. 3 hen which said quite plainly that nothing was too much trouble if he could do anything to please her, even after I pointed out that it was hardly fair, as it was due as much to the Finch having become worn down a little, and to support my argument, I could point with triumph that the best results had not happened in the first nest, but in the third nest, which was quite in agreement with the theory. Meanwhile, the season was fast advancing, No. 3 hen had hatched her wonderful nest on July 1st, and we noticed Mr. Weston had dropped a hint to an enquirer after the truth, that British were likely to moult early this year, which caused my partner many an anxious look. However, No. 1 hen was now sitting again on five eggs, and as the Goldfinch seemed to be losing a little of his swagger, neither was he singing quite so free, and a feather or two was knocking about, it was decided to miss No. 2 hen, reserving him for a grand final. Never did a nest of Mules seem so long in catering for themselves; long even before they could, the hen was calling to the Finch, in such vigorous breeding condition was she. What better prospects could a follower of this theory have? The Goldfinch, at his fifth round, and rapidly on the wane, did not the results from No. 3's previous nest prove that, and had he not been with No. 1 hen since then, and is not No. 3 hen now in more vigorous condition than ever she was? However, No. 3 hen commenced to sit on four eggs, and although No. 1 hen hatched her five eggs, and time had proved the young Mules to be marked just enough to spoil 'em, yet the value I set on those eggs was hardly equalled by that when gazing upon three Great Auk's eggs, in the possession of the landlord of the "Edinburgh Castle," out Kentish Town way. Three of the eggs proved fertile, and were duly hatched, are alive and doing well, and are a fortnight old, and we have succeeded in breeding, at least, what we have not bred this season, a nest of dark Mules, without any spoil on 'em.

WHITE SWALLOWS BREEDING.

SIR,—In reply to G. M.'s letter concerning two white Swallows breeding at Brookthorpe, I hope to find out during next week if the Swallows are adult birds or birds of this season. Since being in business in this city, about five years now, I have had three pure white Swallows in for preservation, but they have all been young birds (and apparently bred from normal coloured parents). Last year I had a very pretty marked adult Swallow to preserve, being well mottled and the tail being almost all white. This bird was picked up in the centre of the city, almost apparently starved to death and the feathers much worn, as if it had been harrassed by other birds, which is very often the case with "varieties." I have had through my hands three pure white Starlings, two Cinnamon, one white Redwing, one Pied, one Pied Swift, several Pied Blackbirds, one Misselthrush, one white Hedge Sparrow, one Cinnamon Sand Martin, one Pied Corn Bunting. During my 18 years' experience as a taxidermist I have set up some dozens of varieties. I think Ireland produces the rarest.

Part II of 'Cage Birds Annual'

IS NOW READY

And will be sent to any address on receipt of a postal order for 1/-, post free; or

Order it at once from your Newsagent

No show secretary should be without this invaluable index to exhibitors all over the country. If any section be weak, reference to the Register of Wins will immediately enable a wire up to be sent.

"I have received the ANNUAL (part 2), with thanks. It might well have been called "Cage Birds Directory." There is no doubt it will be very useful in this way, comprising, as it does, the names and addresses of almost every exhibitor of cage birds of any note. It will also be very useful to fanciers when they are purchasing stock. They can see at a glance whether the advertiser has done any winning with his birds, and in this way save the cost of part 2 many times over.—THOS. ROBSON, 41, Shield-st., Newcastle-on-Tyne."

Parts 1 & 2 of "Cage Birds Annual" complete for 1/3, post free. If you have already ordered Part I. from us, send us 9d. and we will post you on Part II.

THE SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C. AND ITS PATRONAGE.

SIR,—When I received an intimation from Mr. J. W. Rennie, the genial and popular hon. secretary of the Southern Yorkshire C.C., informing me that Plymouth and Battersea were amongst the clubs that had been accorded the support of that Society, I certainly felt very much surprised, as these two clubs, which are separated by such a great distance, are holding their shows in the same week. What fancier, I would ask, with a spark of humanity, would subject his feathered and treasured pets to such a gruelling ordeal as this must perforce entail, namely, a railway journey into far-away Devonshire on the night of the 21st of October, the birds to be on the benches on the two following days, then another dash back South, and the exhibits to be in the hall at Battersea on the 24th and 25th! This is really expecting too much of birds, as the excitement of two shows in one week is quite enough for their frail constitutions, without a railway journey of something like 460 miles thrown in. I notice Mr. Rennie says in his circular, "In the interests of the club, may I appeal to you to give these shows your utmost support by way of entries." As a member of the S.Y.C.C., I should have been only too delighted to have acceded to his wishes had a week, or even a few days, intervened between the shows. Such an arrangement could, I understand, very easily have been carried out, as other clubs than Battersea in South London applied for the patronage of the S.Y.C.C., and had their application been entertained, the strain that might, under the existing arrangement, be placed upon the birds' constitution, would have been entirely obviated. I hope it will be understood, sir, that I have no axe to grind, and that I speak entirely in the interest of the bird, whose well-being should, to my way of thiuking, be safeguarded, as far as possible, by such specialist societies as the S.Y.C.C.

JOHN B. WATERMAN.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

*He Sings! I Play.

Every evening after tea, when I go and practice on the piano, we bring our pet canary into the room, and he sings whilst I play, and when I stop he stops also. The other day, however, when he had had his little song we let our little kitten into the room, and directly she saw him she sat up and begged, and then got close up to the cage, so we put her outside.—From MURIEL BUCK, aged 13, Homedale, Baldock.

A Knowing Creature.

Some three or four months ago I bought an interesting little cinnamon Canary. When I open its cage door it flies out and generally goes to the front of the mirror and looks at its reflection. After standing there some few moments it starts twittering to what it thinks is another bird. It has a mate, a little Goldfinch, with whom it is very friendly. Both of them fly about happy together. Where the Canary goes, the Goldfinch follows. They fly on the floor near the dog, and also on the Parrot's cage. If I put a little hemp seed on my finger and place it in the bars of the Canary's cage it will take it off my finger and thank me in its own little way by singing. When it is time to breed, we are going to get a cock Canary to match with this hen. [No name or address.]

*Big Flocks of Starlings.

I am going to tell our readers of CAGE BIRDS about the Starlings which visit us in the winter. It is a sight to see so many big flocks fly over the town and drop into the fir plantation where they roost quite close together, filling every branch on the trees. Having gone over to see them go to roost, they drop into the fields and the whistling which they make can be heard for a very long distance. As soon as dawn breaks in the morning they fly to their feeding grounds in all directions.—CHARLES KNOWLES, aged 11 years, Helston-road, Penryn, Cornwall.

Longtails and Littlebeaks.

Last April I went for a walk in the country with my father, and as there seemed a lot of birds about I thought I should like to try and find a bird's nest. So in the hedges I began to look, when I soon found one. It was a beautiful nest, too, built in a briar bush about a yard-and-a-half from the ground. It was oval shaped, being made of wool, moss, and bits of dead grass interwoven together, and all on the outside was a grey mossy stuff which the old birds had got off the bark of trees. There was a little round hole at the side near the top, and through this the old birds went in and out. The nest inside was lined with nice soft feathers and there were seven or eight small eggs. The old birds with their long tails and little beaks now came back, so I went away. I hope they reared the young ones all right.—HARRY RABY, 10, Chequersgrove, Bell Barn-road, Birmingham, aged 10 years.

The Kingfisher.

No doubt the Kingfisher is the most beautiful of British birds. From the crown of the head down to the neck, and the whole of the upper part of the body, are of a brilliant green, and a shading of emerald and blue. From the base of the beak, across the eye, is a patch of rufus, which comes white below the ear. The chin and the throat are yellowish white, and the feet are pink and small. The tail is short and the beak long and straight. Its favourite nesting place is in the hole of a bank. Its nest is made mostly of dried bones. The eggs are five to six in number, being of pure white. Its food consists of small fish, minnows, sticklebacks, water-beetles and leeches. Please note.—Kingfishers may be kept in an aviary provided that proper food is given. When first caught they may be fed on small fish, and gradually small chopped beef and hard-boiled egg.—Sent by HAROLD PRUIT (age 12), 2, Walgrave Street, Newland, Hull.

A Hard Tail to Swallow.

Some Swallows who had a nest which opened in front were persistently annoyed by attacks from Sparrows. Instead of closing up their front door and making a side entrance, they resorted to strategy. Whenever the Sparrows thought to take them unawares, they always found one of the parents keeping guard—at least so it seemed, for come whenever they might the Sparrows found one of the Swallow's tails sticking out of the hole. When the Swallows migrated the mystery was solved. The tail was really nothing but three feathers, so ingeniously placed that they quite deceived not only Sparrows, but human beings as well.—FRANK OSWALD FEW, aged ten years, "Clarsville," Buckley-street, Wigan.

SINGING CONTESTS.

LEEDS.

Usual weekly Linnet Contest held at the King's Head, Shannon Street, on August 11th, when 12 birds sang for three good prizes, given by Mr. J. Booth; 1, Stead; 2, Nicholls; 3, shared by Stead and Johnson. Judges, Summers and Cooper. Also August 18th, when 16 birds sang for three prizes; 1, Stead; 2 and 3, shared by Summers, Stead, and Johnson. Judges, T. Crane and E. Worth.—T. SUMMERS, Hon.

An open to all England Linnet singing contest took place at the Prince Albert Inn on August 18th, when ten birds entered for three prizes given by Mr. J. R. Saynor. There was a large company of members and friends present to hear some real good Linnet singing. The birds being in the pink of condition gave a good account of themselves. Judges: E. Wood and B. Jackson. 1, Clegg; 2, Clarke; 3, Chippendale.—E. WOOD, hon. sec.

HOUSE'S

CANARY MANUAL

Price ONE SHILLING. Post Free 1 2.

Superbly illustrated by the Champion Canary Artist Mr. H. NORMAN. EVERY BIRD DEPICTED IS A VERITABLE MODEL, and shows the breeder what to aim for. Some idea of the popularity of this Practical Manual may be gathered from the fact that under the title of "The British Canary," it has passed its Third Edition, entering upon a Fourth Edition of 5,000 copies under the new title of "HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL." MR. HOUSE has thoroughly revised and brought this work up-to-date and incorporated a chapter on the "Roller or Singing Canary."

F. CARL, 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

Foreign birds, speaking generally, have a greater inclination to breed than British species; this difference is widely spread, as it is noticeable in Waterfowl as well as in cage birds, but in both cases there are exceptions on both sides. There seems to be no necessary connection between a bird living well in captivity, and being a good breeder; for some very hardy species seldom breed, while some delicate ones are much more inclined for reproduction. Generally speaking, however, a good breeding bird is a hardy species also.

Owing to unforeseen circumstances I have been compelled to dispose of my entire stock of winning Norwich, Yorkshires, British Birds and Mules, writes Mr. Stone, of Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The gentleman who has purchased my stock is Mr. W. J. Taylor, Newcastle-on-Tyne. I may say my stock consisted of seventy-five birds, with a grand lot of Breeding, Stock, Flight and Show Cages and Carrying Cases for which I received a good round sum.

Educative Swallows.

As the windows of the school at Bromfield, Cumberland, are always open, a pair of Swallows have built their nest and reared four healthy young ones in the main room. The master has used the nest, we hear, as the subject of object lessons in nature study.

I like CAGE BIRDS very much indeed, and always enjoy reading it.—M. E. Rhodes (Bradford).

We have altered the date of our annual show from November 26th and 27th to November 19th and 30th :—A. C. YORKE, Sec., Guildford Show.

All communications in connection with the Leeds Cage Bird Society should be sent to me at 18, Nostor-street, Beeston, Leeds, as I have now taken over the work :—WM. HORNBY, Hon. Sec.

Mr. F. T. Pritchard, of 36, Portland-street, Leamington, writes us that he has been appointed secretary of the Royal Leamington Spa Fanciers' Association, and that all communications regarding the same should be sent to him at that address. The annual show of the Association is to be held in the Winter Hall, on November 7th.

Will you kindly oblige by informing Leeds fanciers threugh your paper that the train for the second outing on Saturday, the 24th, starts from Leeds New Station, 1.55 p.m. Any fanciers wishing to have a good day's outing should join us. All are welcome. Tickets including tea, 2s. 3d. each. We are again visiting the celebrated Monk Fryston aviaries :—WM. HORNBY, Hon. Sec., Leeds C.B.S.

I find I have made a mistake in the final two Canary judges that are to be sent out for the whole of the members to vote upon, they are Messrs. C. A. House and J. Robson, instead of Messrs. J. Mackley and J. Robson. Would you mind obliging me by giving this publicity as it was carelessness on my part. I am extremely obliged for putting our definition so prominently, and commenting upon the proposed Federation, which I think needs a deal of discussion before any practical steps are taken :—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec., City and Sub. A.C.B.

CONCERNING WOODPECKERS.

At a recent meeting of the Bristol Cage Bird Society, that able and experienced keeper of the rarer British birds, and observer of their ways when in a state of nature, Mr. T. H. Cullen, of Clevedon, gave a lecture embodying some of his experiences with the Woodpeckers. Our appended account is culled from a local paper.

For those of us city people whose actual experience of ornithology is limited to nesting expeditions of the school-day period, it will perhaps seem strange that in our midst there are many who derive no inconsiderable amount of pleasure from making the life history of our British birds a special study. Year in year out there are those who find the subject an absorbing one, bringing with it health to the body and an elevating influence to the mind. One can well conceive how delightful must be the excursions to the woodland where bird life in all its busy, bustling, everchanging aspect meets one at every turn, and one can realise how inspiring is the study of Nature's secrets thus revealed.

And many will learn, perhaps with some surprise, that in our own district, not far removed from this centre of commercial industry, with its vast population, the Woodpecker still pursues its wonderful work. How wonderful it is was demonstrated in a peculiarly interesting manner by Mr. T. H. Cullen before the Bristol Cage Bird Society.

THE CARPENTER-BIRD'S SKILL.

Mr. Cullen came to the meeting-place ready to impart some knowledge a life-long study of the Woodpecker had given him, and rarely has an enthusiast on any subject spoken to a more appreciative audience. Himself an artisan, Mr. Cullen has a profound admiration for the skill of this feathered worker, and his sympathy and love for the object of his study was evidenced when he produced a preserved specimen, and told how some heartless individual had taken it from the nest and ruthlessly killed it in order to have it stuffed. It was, he said, a specimen of the Green, the largest of English Woodpeckers, and by far the commonest species. It was found in almost every county in England, but more particularly in those that were freely wooded, and the power of the bird's bill in constructing its dwelling-place, and its cleverness, were truly marvellous. It generally worked out its abode in the trunk of a tree, but sometimes a large branch was selected.

Mr. Cullen was able to give his audience an example of a Woodpecker's workmanship. He had brought with him a section of a tree, and by an ingenious contrivance he was able to show the interior of the habitation. This particular example, he explained, was taken from the branch of a tree which had in the winter storms become detached, and it was whilst tramping through the woodland that his keen eye detected the Woodpecker's work. A seven-mile walk on another day was necessary in order to secure the treasure, and the help of a friend had to be requisitioned to carry it home.

He pointed to the small hole in the outer bark through which the bird had bored, and then, opening the block, which had been divided and placed on hinges, he revealed to the company the excavation of the industrious bird. To a depth of 16 inches or so, the branch had been hollowed out, the circumference being equal to the top of a breakfast cup, and the smoothness and evenness of the walls of the dwelling were a source of wonder to those present. No tool fashioned by man, Mr. Cullen explained, could make the abode of this remarkable bird.

THE WOODPECKER'S GREATEST ENEMY.

The greatest enemy of the Woodpecker was the Starling, which would patiently await the completion of the Carpenter-bird's task, and then turn the rightful owner out and use the hole for its own slovenly nest of moss, grass, sticks, straw, or even string, paper, or rags.

One morning, Mr. Cullen proceeded, he stood watching a Woodpecker, which was at work completing its nest on a tree, thickly branched and heavily leaved, when a squirrel appeared on the scene. The bird evidently resented the intrusion of its neighbour, for one of the fiercest and at the same time most interesting of combats ensued. With a cry of "chink, chink," the Woodpecker darted at the squirrel, and up and down they went, fighting and fighting, until it seemed as if one or the other must receive mortal injury.

The squirrel at length thought it best to retreat, and taking a mighty spring across the roadway that passed through the coppice, he found shelter in a neighbouring tree, and was soon lost to sight. This leap, added Mr. Cullen, was fully 35 feet. Mrs. Woodpecker returned to her work, and soon the chips were flying out of the hole again.

The tenacity of the Woodpecker in clinging to a certain tree for nesting was, the speaker went on, remarkable. During a storm a branch which a bird had hollowed was broken off, but the remainder of the limb was again utilised, and the bottom of the old nest was undermined. Mr. Cullen exhibited specimens of the egg of the Green Woodpecker, and he explained that the male bird had red moustachial streaks, whilst those on the female were black, or very deep brown.

THE GREATER AND LESSER SPOTTED.

Mr. Cullen then proceeded to speak of the Greater Spotted Woodpecker, a specimen of which he was able to show. This variety, he said, had a very wide geographical range, although it was really a native of the British Isles. Its characteristics were similar to those of the Green Woodpecker, and it was also very tenacious with regard to its breeding-place. Its egg, it was explained, was very much smaller than the other species to which he had referred.

Of the Lesser Spotted Woodpecker, Mr. Cullen also had information to impart, and by means of well-drawn sketches, he indicated the spots chosen by the birds for hollowing out their nests. Another sketch represented an ordinary wooden fencing post, which had an interesting history. This post, Mr. Cullen stated, he had himself put into the ground, and one day he noticed that a Woodpecker had commenced work on it. This provided him with a grand opportunity of studying the work of the bird. The hole was begun on the 8th of May, 1901, by the 17th the excavation was sunk, the nest made, and five eggs laid; and on the 30th the young ones were hatched.

Replying to questions, Mr. Cullen said the average depth of the Woodpecker's boring was 16 inches, although he had known them go down to three feet—that was when the boring had been continued from year to year. The Woodpecker made a delightful pet, and when properly looked after, it became very tame and docile. It was, he added, most painful to see the Woodpecker on the show bench—cooped up in a cage 18 inches wide, perched upon a little bit of Virginian cork.

Of the qualities of the Woodpecker as a show bird, Mr. Cullen had something to say. Hitherto, he remarked, the bird had received but scant courtesy from judges. Few birds were more difficult to obtain, more difficult to rear, or more expensive to keep. Yet on the show bench they were not regarded so seriously as they deserved to be.

In connection with showing, Mr. Cullen had a curious coincidence to relate. Some of them, he said, would remember Mr. C. T. Maxwell's Lesser Spotted Woodpecker dropping dead at one of the Crystal Palace shows just when it was about to be judged. Well, that identical bird was hatched in the nest which he had brought as a specimen to show them that evening.

A PRIZE COMPETITION FOR KEEPERS OF FOREIGN BIRDS.

Cash in Exchange for your Experiences.

Turn Spare Moments to Account.

In our position as Editor of this Journal, it has been borne in on us that keepers of Foreign birds are either singularly modest, or singularly reticent. Not a line does one receive from the great majority of them concerning their experiences in their own particular branch of our hobby. This is not as it should be. It affords no encouragement to others to take up the keeping of the beautiful and interesting species which reach our shores from other climes. Those on the threshold of our hobby, so to speak, must have their footsteps guided by bird-lovers who have already trodden the first paths, and can thus advise the beginner how to avoid the pit-falls besetting them, and render his path as smooth and easy to travel over as is possible. To compass this is a duty every bird-keeper owes to the birds which go to make up his pet branch of our hobby. And keepers of Foreign birds ought not to shirk their responsibilities in this direction.

There must be thousands among the readers of CAGE BIRDS, who have kept Foreign birds of various species, and have much knowledge respecting their keeping, feeding and management stored away in their heads. Put those facts on paper for the benefit of fellow lovers of Foreign birds.

To bring about this desirable end, we offer a

CASH PRIZE OF ONE GUINEA

for the best original article on

FOREIGN BIRD KEEPING,

which reaches our offices on or before

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th NEXT.

The said article may concern the making and fitting of an aviary, the stocking and management of an aviary (either indoor or outdoor), the keeping of one particular bird only, or the keeping of a group of birds. In short,

No subject whatever which deals with Foreign Birds is barred.

RULES.

Each essay must be clearly written (or typed), on one side of paper only.

The length is left to competitors, but essays should not contain less than 1,000 words wherever possible.

Faults of spelling and grammar will not be counted against any essay, practical utility, interest, and simplicity being the chief essentials.

No name or address must be put on any essay, but each must be signed with a nom-de-plume, the sender's name and address being attached on a separate sheet of paper.

The Editor's decision will be final. Competent assistance will be called in to aid him in arriving at his decision.

All essays sent in (and any accompanying sketches or photographs) become the property of CAGE BIRDS, but all which are published (over and above the winning essay) will be duly paid for according to their worth to us.

All entries must reach CAGE BIRDS office, 154, Fleet-street, London, E.C., on or before Monday, September 23rd next. Write "Essay Competition" on top left-hand corner of envelope or package.

CANARY BREEDING COMPETITION.

A large number of entries has been made in this competition. All of them will be carefully gone through, and the result announced as soon as possible.

TO OUR READERS.

We regret to have to announce that owing to a serious break down on the part of our printers last week, some fourteen thousand copies of "Cage Birds" were greatly delayed in publication, in many cases not reaching the public until too late to be of any service to them. We have taken such steps as will guard against the remotest possibility of such a highly regrettable event being repeated, and we earnestly ask our readers' assistance to notify all friends who may have been unable to obtain C.B. last week, of the reason for their disappointment. Copies will be sent free on receipt of a postcard.

F. CARL, Publisher "Cage Birds."

SOME SOUTH AFRICAN EXHIBITION BIRDS.

By A. K. HAAGNER, F.Z.S., ETC.

[Reprinted from the South African Poultry Journal and Kennel Gazette.]

Two other birds of quite a different aspect are the Pied and Hooded Weaver Finches (Spermestes fringilloides and S. scutatus); they are more or less of a glossy black, brown and white plumage. The first named is frequently kept in captivity in Europe, where it is known by the name of Magpie Mannikin. My friend, Mr. Robert Toy, of Grahamstown, informs me they make very good cage birds.

Sunbirds or Sugarbirds.

The next group of "Show" birds I propose to deal with are exceedingly showy birds, but are somewhat difficult to keep in confinement for any length of time. I refer to the Sunbirds, or "Sugarbirds" as the Colonial dubs them (Nectarinuda). They are for the most part of brilliant metallic coloration, and are being a little better understood in confinement now.

One of the commonest species is the grass-green Malachite Sunbird (Nectarinia famosa), the males of which possess lengthened tail feathers and a brilliant metallic sheen. They have a softly modulated song—a true herald of spring out here. The next two are the Bifasciated Sunbird (Cinnyris mariquensis) and the black Sunbird (C. amethystinus), the latter of a soft velvety black with the crown bright metallic green, the cheeks, throat and part of the wings metallic violet-purple. Sunbirds feed almost exclusively on nectar, pollen and insects, and as they consume a goodly number of the latter they are exceedingly useful birds.

I think we may justly include the Louries (Musophagidæ) amongst our show birds. The commonest is the Knysna Lourie (Turacus corythaix), a large bird, with grass-green plumage, white tipped crest, and dark-red flight feathers; it is said that this red will wash out with soap and water, but I have never tried it. A more brilliantly plumaged species is the Purple-crested Lourie (Gallirex porphyreolophus), which has a green back and wings, and tail of a lilac-blue. This latter bird is fairly common in the North Eastern Transvaal.

The last group we will refer to in the present paper is the Parrots and Lovebirds whereof South Africa possesses a few, none, however, very gaudily attired. Perhaps the brightest plumaged bird is the Rosy-faced Lovebird (Agapornis roscicollis), which is green and has the throat and face of a rosy-red.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS, Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

Deformed Claw.

Herbert.—You need not despair about your young bird, for if you adopt the following advice, you should succeed in getting it all right. Get a piece of rubber tubing, such as used on a baby's feeding bottle, and cut a piece about a quarter of an inch in width. Pass this over the bird's foot, turn back the hind claw against the leg, and then pass the ring over it so that it will keep it in this position. Let it stop on for a fortnight, when the claw should then be in its proper position, and in a few days should grip the perch quite well.

Size Needed.

Bird Lover.—No, there is nothing special to give Canaries to increase their size. As your young birds are on colour food they are naturally being generously fed as they will be having egg-food, and I presume you are giving them as much seed as they care to eat. You will see a good deal of difference in their size when they have finished moulting. To obtain size, it must be bred for, and no feeding will produce size, unless the birds come from stock possessing this point.

Outdoor Aviary.

Sambo.—The shed you describe, I should imagine is a warm one for this kind of structure, and I think you would do best to keep your birds in the cages. You can then in the cold winter nights cover them over with an old blanket or rug. Of course, if you wish to minimise your trouble, then let them fly about in the room. I am, of course, presuming you are not thinking of exhibiting them.

Birds Squeaking.

E. Horne.—Give your birds fresh daily in the drinking water ten drops of paregoric, ten drops of glycerine, and ten drops of ipecacuanha wine. Continue this treatment for a fortnight, and then dissolve a little best honey in warm water, about a good-sized teaspoonful to half-a-pint of water, and let them have this to drink for a few days, when they should then be all right again.

Sexing Birds.

Like to know.—It is impossible to tell you how to tell the sex of your young Canaries from eight to twelve weeks old; old hands cannot tell for certain. If you know of an old breeder, you should get him to have a look at them, and he would tell you much nearer than I could on paper. As a general rule, the cocks run larger, are more lively, and carry more colour than the hens, and if closely watched, many can be caught twittering. The latter is not always an infallible sign, as many young hens will do this, but if you see your largest and best coloured birds doing this, in all probability they will turn out cocks.

YORKSHIRES.

Answered by H. W. BATTYE.

Injured Leg.

W. C. Marr.—I am inclined to think from what you write that your bird has either broken, or severely sprained its leg. The best advice I can give is to let it have as much rest and quiet as you can. Take away all the perches, and spread on the cage bottom a soft woollen cloth, say, a piece of old blanket or shawl. Put its seed and water in separate vessels on the cage bottom, a couple of heavy salt-cellars would do for this, and would not be as liable to get upset as a lighter vessel might. Disturb as little as possible. Follow this course for a week, or ten days, when I think your bird may be all right, but if not, it may be on the improve, and if so continue the same treatment another week or so. I have known many birds get all right again that have injured themselves in a similar way to the one you describe. I am pleased to know the bird you wrote about some time ago got all right again.

CRESTS AND CRESTBREDS.

Answered by W. E. GREEVES.

Crest Plucked.

C.B.—If your bird had its crest plucked out by another, it will grow again during the moult. The head is, or should be the last place to moult. When this happens, I have always found the crest grow better. This being the case, you may still have hopes of the crest growing, although your bird has been in moult for the past month.—If the head is clean and healthy, there is nothing I can recommend you to make the feathers grow. The only thing I could suggest, would be to moisten the top of the head with warm water, using a small piece of sponge for the purpose. Heat and moisture are the great factors in the production of feather.

Losing Your Crestbreds.

H.C.—Young Canaries require more than plain canary seed after leaving their parents. At first, egg-food may be given twice a week, afterwards once a week; on other days, sound summer German rape, a few groats, and a few hemps; if they become puffy, give bread and milk, which is the best possible food they can have at an early age. Liver disease is generally caused through improper feeding on highly stimulating food, but this does not appear to be so in your case. Do you give particular care and attention to the drinking water, as more often than not the cause of many disorders is bad and stagnant water; this, I could quite understand would be the case, if the water was allowed to remain in the drinkers more than six hours with the air permeated with paraffin. If you are compelled to clean your lamps in the room in which your birds are kept, I should advise you to stand a pan or two about with diluted Condy's fluid, exchanging it the instant that it is exhausted. I should also wash out the drinkers in water charged with Condy's Fluid.

Hen with Bare Patch.

Crest Lover.—Many Crested Canaries have a bare spot at the back of the crest, this is noticeable when the birds are only a few days old, showing a light spot, feathers never grow on these places, and can only be bred out by mating with Crestbreds, which are bred from crests with perfect backs. Continue to feed as you are now doing, which is correct, I prefer not to use any kind of greenfood during the moult.

Loss of Voice.

W.F.B.—You were quite right in giving your bird glycerine and whiskey, but as this does not appear to have made the desired improvement, give it bread and milk every day, over which put four drops of syrup of tolu. The better plan, if you manage it properly, is to give two drops of the syrup of tolu direct into its beak every morning, adding six drops of whiskey to the drinking water, all the same give the bread and milk, but without the tolu, if given direct into the beak.

Growth Over Beak.

E.A.—The growth, if only the size of a hemp seed, is too small to determine its nature; as it develops, and you find that it can be moved about, it may be cut out. Take a very sharp knife, and just cut through the skin, when you will find that the entire substance can be turned out. If the substance is very hard and you are not able to move it, paint with iodine, which will in time waste it away, but this is a slow process, and will take a long time, continue to paint it from time to time.

ROLLERS.

Answered by "SCHOOLMASTER."

A Bad Habit.

W.T.L.—It is certainly annoying to have seed shelled and not eaten—i.e., simply wasted. As you say, it is the best quality canary and rape you can buy, and that 20 other birds are eating them all right, it clearly cannot be the fault of the seed. On the other hand, the bird cannot be unwell, or of course, he would not be singing so stoutly. I should reduce his allowance of seed to a quantity just sufficient to last him the day through. Put a piece of cuttlefish or old mortar between the bars of the cage for him to peck at. In his drinking-water mix a little tincture of gentian—eight to ten drops in each two tablespoonfuls. I should think if you could manage to let him fly in an aviary, or large flight, for a time, this would cure him of the habit, which may have been induced by want of occupation, or amusement.

What has gone wrong.

Scottie.—I certainly think you are yourself to blame for part, at least, of the trouble of your "schoolmaster." You certainly ought not to have pricked the "sore" filled with matter at the root of the tail, for in all probability this was not a "sore" at all, but simply the oil-gland, a provision of Nature for the bird's comfort, and a very necessary one, from which it dresses its plumage with what is a sort of oily preservative. This oil-gland is often mistaken for a "sore" by bird-keepers, which is a pity, especially if they prick or otherwise meddle with it. The latter should never be done, unless the bird is obviously in pain there, and the gland looks really inflamed. You can only keep your bird quiet, and feed him well, and trust to time to bring about a recovery. Give him some egg-bread (say, a good patent food) every day, and a course of tonic medicine. The best you can get, I believe, is Allen and Hanbury's Byno-phosphates, of which one teaspoonful should be well stirred in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water (or halve these quantities).

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Is it Insects?

Canaries have lost some feathers and the butts of wings are becoming raw. I have just got my first nest off successfully. I give them a bath, but only the cock enters it. I have examined, but could not see any insect. I might say that the place where I keep them is very warm and hardly fit.—W.S.R.

W.S.R.—You certainly ought not to be breeding now, and yet you say you have only just got your first nest off. At this time of the year birds should be moulting freely, and as yours are kept in a warm place I am inclined to think, especially as you can find no insects, that your birds are moulting. If so, there is no need for anxiety. You can easily find out if insects are the trouble by placing a white cover over the cage at night, and then taking a light and searching for the insects. Should you discover insects, dust the birds with Keating's, and paint all cracks and crevices of the cage with carbolic acid, also dip the perch ends in the same. Separate the cock and hen, and take away all the breeding utensils.

Young Birds Dying.

My birds taken from the breeding cage when they are five or six weeks old do very well until they begin to moult. They are fed on plain canary seed and water. I shall be glad if you can tell me how to feed them Would colour-feeding improve matters?—F.E.W.

F.E.W.—It certainly is most strange that your birds should do well until they commence to moult, and then die. In one direction only can I find any reason for the trouble, and that is in your leaving the birds in the breeding-cage until they are five or six weeks old, then taking them out and putting them on to plain seed and water at once. The sudden change from the soft egg food to hard seed may derange the digestive organs, and then when the birds commence to moult, their systems are not strong enough to stand the double strain of keeping up the ordinary functions of life, and at the same time growing a new coat of feathers. To put the birds which you have left on colour food would not assist matters at all. I should advise you to give them egg food twice daily, with just a sprinkling of the ordinary cayenne pepper, not with any idea of colour feeding them, but as a stimulant. You might also give them each day a little Parrish's Chemical Food, just enough to colour the drinking water a nice rosy pink. Green food should be given daily, and in the wires of the cages, place a piece of fat raw bacon, which should be renewed every other day.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Cutting Tongues, etc.

D.D.C.—I am still unable to identify the birds with certainty—for the simple reason that I cannot quite reconcile the description you gave in your previous letter with any species known to me. As the nest was in a hole in the bank, I think with some confidence they were Whinchats. Your description corresponds roughly with the appearance of male and female of this species. Whinchats are not seed-eaters, but insectivorous birds, more or less delicate, and difficult to keep in captivity, according to the experience as a bird-keeper of the person who essays the task. If you are not well up in all that appertains to the keeping of insect-feeding birds, and in a position to supply them with suitable food (a not inexpensive item) I strongly advise you to let these birds alone—if, that is, this reply is read in time. A good cock Whinchat just "meated-off" (got well on to food) is worth 10/- upwards; one moulted out into show condition somewhere roundabout 30/- to 40/-, according to its particular excellence, and the buyer. They will not breed in captivity, unless it be in a very large, suitably-fitted outdoor aviary. The weed enclosed is shepherd's purse.

What Constitutes a Finch Class?

Bully.—Some internal trouble has upset your birds, but its exact nature could not be told without a post-mortem examination. I advise you to give an entire change of diet. As the young Bullies are fond of "sop," let them have sweet biscuit (maizena wafers, or Osborne soaked in milk, with a dessertspoonful of clean, best-quality ants' eggs mixed amongst it). See that it is never allowed sour in the cage. In addition, let them have mawseed liberally every day. Also gather as many seeding thistle tops as you can find, and any blackberries, while a little of any ripe fruit would doubtless be welcomed by them. Don't gather them any wild seeds, etc., which are soaked with water—go out for such on a dry day (if you can find one). A little soaked summer-rape (in cold water until just sprouting) can also be given the birds daily. Dab some dry in a cloth before offering it. The stock mixture you mention, of canary, teazle, summer-rape, and a little sunflower, you can continue with. Don't give salad oil, but for a few days well stir a half teaspoonful of dandelion juice (taraxacum), bought from a chemist, into each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Further, over the same period, well stir amongst each tablespoonful of the "soft-food" as much Dover's Powder (also from the chemist) as will lie on a shilling. Don't worry at present over the Bullies not eating seed; they will go back to it when they recover. I should like to know how you go on.

Thistle Seed; Young Greenfinches.

Novice.—The thistle-seed you send is badly-grown, that is, is not plump and full, as it should be. If you consult the articles on "Wild Plants" now running in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, you cannot well go wrong over the gathering of thistles and other suitable wild seeds for your birds. Greenfinches when in nestling plumage resemble their mothers (like most other young Finches), sexual differences in the plumage only becoming manifest after the moult. Note reply to "Two Weeks' Reader," in our last issue. Should any of the young Greenies seem bigger and bolder than the rest, and look to have more green and traces of yellow in their coats, you can with some certainty write these down as probable males.

Young Bullfinches Ailing.

Show Secretary.—You misunderstood the point of the reply given by me a while back under the above heading. The querist asked me then whether any bird with a name not ending in "finch" could rightly compete in a class headed "A.V. (British) Finch." The answer, of course, was in the affirmative. The Sparrows, the Redpolls, the Linnet, the Siskin, the Crossbill—to give a few instances—are one and all Finches. But I further pointed out that the heading was a somewhat loose one, inasmuch as the great Finch Family embraced three sub-families, viz., the Grosbeaks, the Finches, and the Buntings. If only the true Finches (those comprised in the second-mentioned sub-family, Fringillinæ) were allowed in it, then the Greenfinch and the Hawfinch would have to be excluded, for they are Grosbeaks. If we admit the Grosbeaks, then it is only logical that we should admit the Buntings. Yet very few exhibitors, I fancy, would think of entering a Yellowhammer or a Snow Bunting, for example, in an "A.O.V. Finch" class. Strictly speaking, however, they certainly should do so. Trouble arose at the last Watford show over this point, the judge "wrong classing" all the Buntings which had been entered in the "A.O.V. British Bird" class. The peculiarity of the situation lay in the fact that ninety-nine out of every hundred judges (probably) would have accepted them as correctly entered—in fact, many would no doubt have fired them out of the Finch class had they found them entered therein. Coming to your own case, if the Hawfinch is accepted as a Finch, then it certainly ought to have gone in class 25- of your schedule; consequently your action was frowned-on any case, giving just my own personal opinion, it was unwise of you to make the change as only by "hair-splitting" could it be held as eligible to compete in class 36. Had I been the judge, I should not have accepted it therein.

Particulars About Strangers.

E.M.—I have frequently stated that the cutting of birds' tongues with a view to aiding them to talk is a barbarous and unnecessary cruelty. Anyone who perpetrates the deed ought to be prosecuted, and given a few days "without the option." Birds do not use their tongues to talk with, consequently neither the "loosening" nor any other mutilation of the unfortunate members can affect their ability to articulate. I know several splendid talking Jays (one a wonder), and Magpies, and also a Jackdaw, and none of these has been touched—probably would not be alive now had they been hacked about. The staple diet of Jays and Magpies should comprise best quality dog biscuits, soaked and mixed up with table scraps of meat, gravy, vegetables and the like. Bread-crumbs and crushed hempseed make a very poor fare for them, and they will thrive but a short time unless you change it. Grated liver, and most kinds of cooked flesh, are good for them, nuts, sunflower seed, dead young Sparrows (or other young birds), cockroaches (black beetles) and many other creeping things, trapped mice, etc. Fruit and greenfood of various kinds should likewise be offered them. Some are very fond of groundsel.

Mainly About Mules.

Woster.—You say you have bred the Mules from a "buff yellow" Canary hen. But what this means I cannot fathom—she may be a buff, or she may be a yellow, but she certainly can't be both. Glad to know you have had good luck. 1: They seem to me to be just ordinary Goldie-Mules, good for pets or songsters, and if so, worth from 5/- to 7/6 each (the cocks), when moulted and on song. If they sang the pure Goldfinch notes (they would require a good singing Goldie for a tutor, and to hear no other bird), their value would be more than doubled. Light feathers in the tail spoil any Mule for "Dark Mule" classes. 2: The safest way to sex them is to wait until they are over the moult, when the cocks will soon commence to sing. Most early hatched young cock Mules sing before they drop into moult. Have you not heard yours? 3: Get a good tutor, by all means. He will also improve the notes of your adult hand-reared Gold finch. Hand-reared birds seldom make good songsters, unless trained under a good singer of their own species. 4: The period is indefinite (depending on many things), but September should see your birds over the moult. 5: Buy a clear or ticked pink-eyed hen of Yorkshire type, bred from a clear strain. Go to a reliable fancier for her. It is not necessary to buy right away, but don't leave the purchase too late—about October would do, when well over the moult. 6: The Mules would not be worth the trouble of color-feeding, I fancy. Use the sweet (tasteless) pepper, advertised in these columns. All vendors send instructions for its use; many articles and answers on this point have also appeared in our columns during the past few weeks.

Linnet Queer.

Anxious.—You really ought not to have left the bird so long before trying some remedial treatment or other. Try the following: For one day dissolve in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much sulphate of soda as will lie on a shilling; then, for ten days, or a fortnight (as seems necessary) give on alternate days (plain water in between) a mild dose of dandelion juice (taraxacum), half a teaspoonful in the above-mentioned quantity of water. Keep him in a box-cage (that is, wired in front only) hung in a snug corner of a warmed room, and covered over with something suitable at night. Give him a change of diet, as far as is possible. Let him have maw seed in plenty, with a little lightly cracked (fresh daily) hemp. Also gather and give any ripe plantain, shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel, thistles, etc., that you can find—only the seeding parts are necessary. These things may tempt him to eat, and then you stand a chance of pulling him round. After he brightens up, then stop the taraxacum and give the chemical food—the latter will be useless until this takes place.

Briefiets.

Weeds (W.A.).—The weed with heart-shaped pods is shepherd's purse. The other is one of the dock family.

Is it a Goldfinch? (Beer).—Yes; the bird you have bought is a Goldfinch right enough. It is a young bird—i.e., a "Greypate"—in nestling plumage. The red blaze on face will come with the moult. It should, of course, make a good songster, if it turns out a male.

Caging a Chaffinch (Lover of Birds).—If the Chaffinch which has been caged for the past sixteen months has settled down quietly to captive life, there is certainly no cruelty attached to the fact of your keeping it in a cage, under good conditions, and with good food and attention. Don't let other people's drivel affect you.

Linnets and Colour Feeding (E. Kingdon).—Your feeding is about right. Give a little hemp while moulting; also you should gather ripe plantain and shepherd's purse, while chickweed, thistles and wild seed mixture (this latter advertised in our columns) will also be relished. See reply to "Josh-O-Brum" last week concerning colour-feeding.

A White Meadow Pipit (E.T.).—I cannot call to mind hearing or reading before of an Albino Meadow Pipit with pink eyes. Certainly I cannot remember ever having seen one. Yours must be a beautiful bird, and I shall hope to meet it later on at one or other of the shows. Possibly if any reader has seen or heard of a pure white, pink-eyed Meadow Pipit before, he may kindly let us know.

Stuck in Moult (Phyllis Yaldwyn).—I quite agree that you made a mistake in putting Bullie out of doors while in the moult—a dangerous move. Put him in a cage by himself, and bring him indoors again, hanging him in a warm corner, and covering his cage three parts down the front with a warm cover. This treatment may start him moulting again. If not, write me in a week or two's time.

Bare of Feathers (Anxious).—I am of opinion that the bare places will be re-covered with feathers during the moult, now in progress.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Wintering Budgerigars.

Will Budgerigars winter in a hay-loft, the only heat being from a fire in the saddle-room below; their cage is 3ft. by 2ft. by 1ft. If I move them into a cage 5ft. by 3ft. by 1½ft., can I keep a pair of either of the following with them- Madagascar Lovebirds, Cockateels or another pair of Budgerigars. Which would be the better?—"NOVICE."

Novice.—Budgerigars will winter in any unheated room, they are very hardy birds; at the same time they must be protected against draught. In the larger cage, you could put in either of the birds you name, but I should give the preference to either Budgerigars or Cockateels, the latter would make an agreeable contrast, or if you already have Green, get a pair of Yellow Budgerigars or vice versa. All would thrive on the same food, and are sufficiently hardy to be kept in the loft. Diet: canary, white and spray millet, and a few white oats twice a week, give the latter daily when they have young to feed. They also require continuous supplies of grit, cuttlefish and water, and a little greenfood daily.

Grey Parrot Plucking Itself.

A young Grey, which reached me from Las Palmas on July 22, picks the feathers off one leg, so much so, that a fluid is coming from it; the bird is very mopy; it is fed on boiled maize, no water to drink. What is the remedy?—G. RORSON.

G. Rorson.—I really consider it would be better to let a vet. prescribe for your bird. it is a pity to lose a bird that you have privately brought over. However, if you object to this, bathe the leg with lukewarm water, dry, and then lightly annoint with spermaceti ointment. Give the bird two or three doses (half teaspoonful in two tablespoonsful of water) of Dinneford's magnesia, and let the bird have nothing else to drink for that day, the doses to be given with a three day's interval between each; on the days you are not giving the magnesia, well colour its drinking water with Parrish's chemical food, continue the chemical food for a month at least. Do not leave water in the cage, but let it satisfy its thirst three or four times a day. Diet: A seed mixture of two parts each canary and white oats, and one part each dari, hemp, wheat and sunflower seed, well mix and keep a supply continuously in the cage. Continue to give the boiled maize till you find the bird eating freely of the dry mixture, then gradually discontinue the maize, finally leaving it off altogether. Also give at intervals to vary the diet, ripe fruit (as in season), plain biscuit, nuts, greenfood (a leaf of fresh lettuce is as good as any), with grit and cuttlefish regularly, and water several times a day as directed above. If the leg does not heal, you had better repeat query with full details. Do not give tea, coffee or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatsoever.

Breeding Foreign Finches.

In my inside aviary, 7ft. by 4ft. by 5ft. high, I have pairs of Zebra Finches, Zebra Waxbills, Tricolour Nuns, Green Singing Finches, Spice birds, Silverbills, and Fire Finches. Will any or all of these breed in confinement?—"ENQUIRER."

Enquirer.—The Zebra Finches and Silverbills should be certain breeders, the others probable ones, all have bred in confinement, but with the exception of Zebra Finches, Budgerigars, and some species of Parrakeets. Foreign birds do not breed in confinement with the same precision as Canaries, but many species of Foreign Finches will bring up a brood fairly regularly; sometimes these having the reputation of doubtful breeders will nest freely with some one aviculturist, where in many other aviaries they have never even built. Gouldian, Ruficanda, Pectoral, Chestnut, Diamond, Ribbon, and Grey Singing Finches are all probable breeders; but I should only keep six pairs in the aviary at most, as you wish for breeding results, though you have accommodation for about twenty-five birds the size of a Norwich Canary. The arrangements of your aviary appear to be excellent, and you should have good results.

Budgerigars and Cockateels.

In my aviary, 5ft. by 3ft. by 4ft. high, there are three pairs Green and one pair Yellow Budgerigars. Please give treatment, and how can I sex them? If I remove one pair of the Budgerigars, can I put in a pair of Cockateels?—"BUDGERIGAR."

Budgerigar.—Your accommodation is already occupied, my advice is to get a pair of Cockateels, and to reduce the Budgerigars to one pair each of Green and Yellow, and then to dispose of young, as they are able to feed for themselves. The same diet and treatment will suffice for all; of course, a log nest of some kind of suitable size will be required for the Cockateels. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet, and a few white oats, two or three times a week, the oats will be required daily when they have young to feed. In addition, you must give regularly, greenfood (grass in the ear and fresh lettuce are best), cuttlefish, grit, and water ad lib. Crush the egg shells left from your table and scatter them over sand. As your space will be well occupied, you must pay strict attention to cleanliness. Those with the blue ceres at base of upper mandible are males, those you describe as having white ceres are probably immature birds, and sex would as yet be unknown. The cere of the female is dark brown when in breeding condition, during the mount and off season it frequently becomes bluish, but seldom as bright in colour as that of the male.

Java Sparrows.

(1) Should these birds be kept indoors or out? (2) How can I tell the sex? (3) Do they breed in captivity?—"ANXIOUS."

Anxious.—(1) These birds are very hardy, and do well in any outdoor aviary supplying space for exercise and a night shelter, under such conditions they can be left out of doors all the year round. The White variety do, perhaps, equally well in a cage indoors, the cage should be a roomy one; any ordinary living or unheated room will suffice. (2) There is no difference in plumage in the sexes, and but little in size, but after a little practise sexes can be picked out by the shape of the beak, that is, in adult birds, that of the male is stouter at the base and also a little shorter than that of the female, which is narrower and more pointed. This distinction is only of use by comparison, it being very difficult to state the sex of a solitary bird. The male has a pleasing warble which he is very fond of uttering, the female being comparatively silent. (3) The White variety is a free breeder in either cage or aviary; the Grey variety is very erratic in this respect. A good plan is to get a White female and Grey male; their progeny will mostly come true Grey (but such pied specimens as are produced are usually very handsome), and form a free breeding strain.

Sexing Blue-winged Lovebirds.

(1) What is the difference in plumage of the sexes? (2) What is their diet? (3) Do they require greenfood?—"BLUEBIRD."

Bluebird.—(1) The male has his lower back, rump, and flights, bright blue, the remainder of his plumage being green. The female is plain green, of a slightly lighter shade than the male, and has no blue in her plumage. (2-3) These birds do well on canary, white and spray millet, with greenfood, cuttlefish, such ripe fruit as they will eat, and a continuous supply of water. Grass in the ear or fresh lettuce are the best greenfoods. Some give a little milk sop, but I have never found this essential; if given, care must be taken that it does not remain in the cage long enough to become sour. These beautiful and interesting birds (their proper name is Passerine Parrakeets) have bred both in cage and aviary on one or two occasions, with English aviculturists.

Breeding Zebra Finches.

(1) Should I remove the eggs from Zebra Finches just commencing to lay? (2) How many eggs form the clutch? (3) Do they lay daily, or miss a day between each egg?—"DUD."

Dud.—(1) It is seldom that I interfere with my birds sufficiently to know when the respective eggs are laid; save with such pairs as I put up specially for observation and gathering data, taking my chance as to whether they desert their eggs in consequence of my interference. Nothing whatever is to be gained by removing the eggs, leave them to themselves. (2) Usually 5, but varies from 4 to 7. (3) It is seldom the whole clutch is laid on successive days, but there are certainly two days dropped during the laying of a clutch of five, the period at which this occurs being erratic. In your case it will probably be one egg, one day missed, two eggs on successive days, another day missed, and then the other two laid out without further pause. Sometimes the first two eggs are laid on successive days, and so it varies one way and another, though the first-named order is that most often occurring.

Young Virginian Cardinals Dying.

My Virginian Cardinals, apparently healthy birds, have young ones, who die from evidently congenital enlarged gizzards. Last nest, three birds. I sent one last year for post-mortem, which reported "liver enlarged, though congenital." Can anything be done to prevent this?—E.M.F.

E.M.F.—Before I attempt any definite answer, kindly supply me with the conditions under which they are kept, with full details as to diet, and age to which they lived. If you have young at the present time, supply all the insect food you can, mealworms, gentles, beetles, smooth caterpillars, spiders, let it be varied and as much as you can supply—this treatment will give them the best chance. Supply also as stock food, a soft food mixture of sponge cake (crumbled), ants' eggs (best), dried flies, fine ground pupæ, and game meal in equal parts; for use, take one part game meals, pour over it as much boiling water as it will absorb, and then knead equal parts of the other ingredients, when the mixture should be crumbly-moist; let them have a varied supply of ripe fruit, as much as they will eat. You are not alone in your disappointing experience; most species of Cardinals fail to rear their young, and with such as are reared most fail to live any lengthy period. In my own aviary Green Cardinals hatched out five broods last year, and did not fully rear a single youngster, and again this year, three broods, none reared, and from several correspondents I learn the same result as to Grey Cardinals.

What Parrot?

It is about the size of a Turtle Dove, but with a much longer tail; it is of a grass-green colour, with head and neck grey, and flights blue. What is its name? What is its food and treatment?—"NEW BEGINNER."

New Beginner.—This bird has quite a number of vulgar names: Monk, Quaker, Monte Video, and Grey-breasted Parrakeet, but it is most commonly known and sold as the Quaker Parrakeet. It is a bird of fine appearance, and while I believe almost every species of Parrot and Parrakeet can be taught to say at any rate a word or so, I never came across a talking Quaker yet. Get a quart each of canary, millet, hemp, dari, white oats, and sunflower seeds; well mix and let this be your staple diet. Let it have a little of such ripe fruit as it will eat, a little greenfood (they are very fond of lettuce), a little plain biscuit or stale crust of household bread; with continuous supplies of cuttlefish, grit and water for drinking and bathing ad lib. I have found this species as "hard as nails." It is a native of South America.

Grey Parrot Moulting.

My bird, a new acquisition, said to be through the moult, is rather bare all up its legs, and especially so under the wings. It does not improve, and seems to be continuously fidgetting with its plumage. I cannot trace any insects. How must I treat? It is fed on boiled maize and packet food. —Miss M. B.

Miss M. B.—With many individuals the first moult in this country is quite a protracted one, and particularly so with a young bird. Give the bird one tablespoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in two tablespoonsful of water, and let it have only this to drink for one day, repeat the dose in a week's time. On other days (continue same for a month at least) well colour its drinking water with Parrish's chemical food. Keep a close watch on the bird if you detect it pulling its feathers; well spray its plumage with quassia solution every other day. Whatever the weather, you must keep it out of draught till dry. Details as to diet are fully given in this and last issues, to which I must refer you. Do not give milk, tea, or coffee sops, or any kind of animal food whatsoever. You must persevere with the quassia solution treatment, if the bird proves a feather picker, till it is broken of the habit, which is not very readily given up once it is acquired, but in your case success should be attained within a reasonable period, as it appears to have been taken in time.

Amazon with Cold.

My bird has been troubled with sneezing and running at the nose. It is kept in a warm corner, and has been given tincture of aconite, but it does not improve; it is, however, hearty, and eats well. I have just lost a Grey with a similar complaint. What can I do for it —J. C. D.

J. C. D.—I fear there was more than a cold the matter with the Grey you have just lost, and fear the Amazon has been contaminated. Thoroughly scald out your cages with boiling water, carefully seeing that every crevice is thoroughly searched therewith—they would be safer if they were well painted over with neat paraffin. Well search the crevices before they are scalded, finally giving them a thorough swilling with cold water, and when dry they should be quite safe to use. As regards the bird spray for mite with a camel hair brush) its nostrils with diluted glycothermoline, it will do no harm if a little is swallowed. Also get the following from your chemist—equal parts of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine; put half a teaspoonful of this mixture into the egg cupful of water and let the bird have this daily till relief is given. You make no mention of diet. You should give boiled maize twice a week, the maize only keeps fresh one day, while its staple food should be equal parts of canary, oats, wheat, dari, hemp, Indian corn, and sunflower seeds, well mix and keep supply continuously in its cage; it must have regular supplies of cuttlefish, grit, greenfood, and water ad.lib, while as extras may be given, nuts, ripe fruit, plain biscuits, and boiled potato (dry). Put, for one day only, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia over its boiled maize, and repeat the doze after a week's interval. When the cold has yielded, put the bird on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food for two or three weeks—see other replies.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

German Canary (G.W.).—Septic inflammation of liver, lungs and bowels. It would be advisable to run the birds into clean cages and thoroughly disinfect their present quarters.

Unflighted Norwich (Geo. H. D.).—This bird, and probably your other three, died of "Bird Fever," which must have been brought into your room, either with an infected bird or cage.

Two Canaries (Mrs. Williams).—Both these died of inflammation of the liver and lungs, but the entire absence of fat, and the general emaciation of body are sufficient to show that the birds were diseased before those from the aviary were brought into the same room. In any such cases the cages, floors especially, should be disinfected with boric acid solution; one teaspoonful to a pint of hot water.

GENERAL.

Answered by the EDITOR.

Cutting (C. H.) Many thanks for cutting, which I had already seen, but, thank you none the less for sending. I also thank you for the note about the annual, and much regret that the mistake has occurred.

Cutting (R. E. P.) Many thanks for cutting. We have made the correction mentioned.

Cuttings (A. W. C.) Many thanks for cuttings. Hope you are making good progress towards recovery.

A Balance (Fair Play).—Legally you ought to pay the 3/6, but I would suggest that you endeavour to come to some mutual arrangement with the seller. He may possibly be disposed to meet you under the circumstances.

Address Wanted (W. P.) The following firms who are light box makers will doubtless manufacture what you require:—Arundel and Marshall, 27, Penn-street, Hoxton, N.; Clements, Newling, and Co., 95, Wood-street, E.C.; Johns, Son, and Watts, Ltd., 40, City-road, E.C.; J. Whitehead and Co., Bath Works, Baldwin-street, City-road, E.C.

Suggestions (Thompson, Greenwich).—Thanks, we need little spurs like your postcard occasionally. They are instructive.

Congratulations (Suggestion).—Pleased to know that you think that this series will prove both interesting and profitable. Your suggestion is a good one, and so far as we possibly can we will hear the point in mind in the future. It would not do, however, for advertisement pages to be alternated with literary pages. Such an arrangement was tried in the now defunct "Stockkeeper" with disastrous results.

EVEN MARKED CANARIES.

By T. H. KINCH.

On looking through the reports last show season I could not find a class for even Marked Canaries, either Norwich or Yorkshire. Why show committees won't give a class I cannot understand? Surely there are enough even-marked birds left yet to fill a class at our large shows, even if the class included the Borders, of which some grand birds are now bred. What is more beautiful than a good even-marked bird of either variety? If well fed, and with well balanced markings, it would cause man a one's "mouth to water" to own such a specimen.

As an old breeder of this variety in the eighties, I have had many a grand one for years; I have kept this strain pure for over twenty years. The first pair of birds I had was from the late Mr. Blakston, both buff Norwich young ones from his best birds. I could not get from him only two buffs. The yellows he could not spare at that time. The markings of them were: Cock, eight dark feathers in each wing, but he had no eye markings. The hen had good eye markings, not heavy, rather lightly marked, but even, and one of her wings only was marked.

THE FIRST YEAR.

These birds bred me seven young ones in two nests the first year, which I thought was a good start. Three of these were quite clear, one had beautifully even marked eyes and wings, the others were unevenly marked ones. All these were buffs. I thought they might turn out so, breeding from two buffs. Now I had to look about me and get a yellow or two. I was not so particular about being evenly marked if I knew that they came from an evenly marked strain. I got from a breeder a large yellow cock, evenly, but very heavily marked. I paired him with the largest clear hen I had, and bred two good evenly marked young, both being hens, but yellow, which were what I wanted most, for I am a great believer in a good hen.

These two I kept to lay the foundation, as I have found out that the young cocks always take more after the hen than the cock and the young hens more after the father, perhaps not always in colour, but in size, shape and build. They were not nearly as stout as the present day Norwich are, but still fair birds of the Norwich variety in the eighties. The unevenly marked ones of the first year, I paired brother and sister together to set the strain, and get the blood pure.

I was told by the "knowall's," that I should have the young ones come poor, sickly, and sparely feathered, but results proved quite different. They were strong healthy birds, but not a good four-pointed one was there amongst them. Some had good eye markings, and some good even wing marks. From these young birds, and the young from the yellow cock I had, that year, two grand even-marked cocks whose markings were beautifully balanced. These I sold as show birds, before the moult, as at that time I was quite unable to moult them myself. The years that I bred from this strain.

A FRESH COCK EVERY SEASON.

I always got a fresh cock in each year, and many a difficulty have I had to get it from a pure strain. Several years I bought the perfect article and crossed with a clear hen. This perfect article took some time to get its like again. I nearly always bought the yellow cock as my strain was mostly buffs. I found that I got better results from a yellow cock and buff hen than the reverse way. I have tried both ways, and only twice did I get an exhibition bird from the buff cock and yellow hen. Now in breeding Norwich I have had just the opposite from the sexes, but still their blood was not so pure, nor set like the evenly marked.

Some of my best results have been from two clear birds, which I tried as an experiment, and bred from them for five years, generally a good one was produced each year, besides others fairly marked which came in well for re-crossing and Mule breeding. When one of these birds, which was a beauty, was about ten weeks old, a gentleman came and offered me £5 for it. I refused it, much to my regret, for it died before the day was out, and from what cause I could not state, or find out, but have since thought it was from the rape seed. I used in those days to give the ordinary black and white seed, so called, i.e., canary and rape, winter or cole.

TESTING RAPE SEED.

As I lost other birds in later years I tested the cole seed, by boiling for twenty minutes, and found the water was very rank and strong, which fully convinced me as to what was the cause. Several other fanciers' birds, which had died, somewhat similarly, were brought to me, and their symptoms were the same as mine, so we quite concluded the rape was the cause.

After I had boiled the seed I used to well dry it in the sun. I found that they would eat it just as readily as before, and no further harm came to them. After breeding with this strain for some ten years, they being continually in-bred, began to run too small for me, and were getting about the size of the Borders of to-day.

EVEN MARKS NOT TO BE FOUND.

I could not get a bird large enough for me with either good markings or from an even marked strain. I introduced the largest clear yellow Norwich hen I could get from a clear strain, so it was guaranteed me. The young from this pair I started to inbreed again to set this blood, but the tails were always too long for me, and took me years to reduce, which was only done by careful selection and mating. Although I inbred freely I always did it in a judicious manner by selecting the largest and strongest.

I think out of all my good birds I bred only one which had pea-eye markings in the Norwich birds, and very seldom did the unevenly-marked ones have the pea-eye This kind of eye marking I never did like—I always preferred the spectacle markings, and sold the pea-eyed ones, for which I had always a ready sale, for Mule breeding. I can say that some I continually inbred for muling purposes only, but can never remember any of them to have had pink eyes, and only once in twenty years did I get a six-pointed bird good enough for show purposes.

Several times I have had five-pointed ones, eyes and wings, with dark tail. One of these I kept for years and bred from to see if it would produce the dark tail, but the young never took after this parent, neither would it produce a six-pointed bird which was my object in trying it.

From one pair in 1887 I bred three good show specimens. This was the most I ever got from one pair in a season. I only put up four pairs of these Norwich, and I considered that I had done well if I bred two good birds from them each year.

THE YORKSHIRE VARIETY.

Even-marked Yorkshires I have also been a breeder and lover of, but always gave the Norwich bird the preference. My Yorkshires came from a good breeder of this class of birds; in 1884, the cock was marked on eyes and wings. The eye markings were of a pea shape, the hen had only slight eye markings. The first year there were no good birds at all. They were either too heavy in eye or wings, but mostly variegated. These I had in-bred for years before I got anything suitable to my mind. Then I had to increase their length, and after a time I managed to breed several good high-class birds. All my birds were easily sold at that time. I never kept any to moult as I had not the room, neither was I able then to give them the attention. From this Yorkshire strain I have bred some grand Mules.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STRONGER SEX PREDOMINATES.

SIR,—As a reader of your paper, it has occurred to me that the following may be of interest to the readers of your columns, if you care to publish it. As far as I can find out, it is a very unusual occurrence. A short time ago I acquired a pair of Yorkshire Canaries for breeding purposes. In due course, the hen laid four eggs, which, on hatching, proved to be all male birds. They are now six weeks old, and all doing well. Is this so uncommon as I suppose?

W. KIRSEL.

CRESTED TIT IN IRELAND.

SIR,—About eight o'clock last Friday I was watching a pair of gold crowned Wrens in an ornoca, which is a favourite haunt of these birds. As my house is in front of a large fir wood, the Tits and Golderests are common in the garden. I heard an unfamiliar note like a sharp si si si, followed by a low pur rirurir, and upon looking closely to see what bird uttered it, I saw a small Tit-like bird flying among the branches. At times it raised a pointed crest like that of the Skylark, which was black with white streaks. As I know something of birds, I at once recognised it as that very rare bird, the Crested Tit. After a while it came nearer, so that I could see its colours. It had sides of face white, rest of head black, upper parts reddish brown, under pinkish white. It was a little longer than a Cole Tit. I have noticed a few rare birds about here, Crossbills, Hobby Falcons, Merlins, Hawfinches, and Wood Warblers. I would like Mr. G. E. Weston to give his opinion on it. I wish to remain unknown, because several of my neighbours read CAGE BIRDS, and I do not wish it to be shot.

BIRD LOVER.

THE BREEDING SEASON.

Another look around Newcastle.

SIR,—Now that the breeding season is drawing to a close, perhaps a few brief notes about the success of the various breeders will be of interest to some of your readers. Mr. "Jimmie" Little, of Scotch Fancy fame, has finished with close upon forty. I think that, with a successful moult, some of his young birds will do well, for he has some seven or eight exceptionally good ones, and in such experienced hands are sure to come out right. Mr. MacPartling has had what he calls a fair season. He has bred some nice Twite Mules, both marked and dark ones. He has also a nice-looking Greenfinch Canary Mule. I am sure "Mac" deserves good luck, for he keeps the birds for the love of them. "Bob" Young has had a good season, over fifty young ones, Borders and Norwich and some very promising birds amongst them, especially the Borders. Ned Robson, Jack Coutts, and H. Cummins have only done moderately; but they only smile, and wish for another season to again try their luck. Bill Scott has done exceedingly well, over 30 young Norwich, but mostly buffs; he has also a decent Mule or two. Mr. Harvey has, so I have been told, bred some very good Scotch Fancies, and hopes to win Mr. Haggie's special. Mr. Chapman has done very well with his Border Fancies but he deserved better luck with his Scotch-men. Mr. "Joe" Harrison has bred some 20 nice Yorkies, and he succeeded in getting a card or two at the First Feather Show. Mr. Robson has some very decent Norwich, and he will hold his own in the Crested line. Mr. Robson is a fancier of the right stamp who does all that lies in his power to encourage young fanciers, there's nothing seems a trouble to him. By the way, I was sorry to hear of his good yellow-crested bird dying, but hope that he will soon have another to put in its place. Our secretaries, Messrs. Curry and Hutchinson, have done well, having both got a decent Crest or two; in fact, Mr. Curry thinks he has "a walk over" for Mr. Haggie's special, but don't forget there's many a slip, etc. Mr. Currah has got, to use his own words, a house full. He has some exceptionally good Crests and Crest-breds, he also has some nicely-marked Borders. Mr. Maddison will astonish a few this year, having got an almost clear Linnet Canary Mule, also an almost clear siskin Canary Mule, and is for clear Goldfinch Canaries, they are a common occurrence in his room. He has also a good Goldie-Bullie that will be heard tell of. I think the fancy will be surprised to hear that Mr. Luke Stone has disposed of all his stock. Mr. Taylor, of Milburn House, being the lucky purchaser. I know that Mr. Stone had some really good birds; birds that will be heard tell of again. I believe that Mr. Bertram has got a few good young 'uns, but up to the present I have not seen them. Mr. Shepherd has had a disastrous breeding season, the last time I saw him, he had only got one young one, but was, like the little boy, "hoping for more."

NOVOCASTRIAN.

LIABILITY OF YEARLY MEMBERS OF CLUBS.

SIR,—Members of ornithological associations have been much exercised by a test case on the question of the liability involved in becoming members of such associations. I enclosed the Sheriff's finding for publication, as it appears in the "Kilmarnock Standard," of 17th August. If fanciers are to be secured as members, it is absolutely necessary that the rules should be revised: "In the Sheriff Small Debt Court on Wednesday, Sheriff Mackenzie heard agents and gave judgment in an action of considerable interest to the members of the Kilmarnock Ornithological Association. John Blane, the secretary, on behalf of the Association, sued William Reid, shoemaker, 21, West Shaw Street, for payment of 7s. 6d. in respect that he was a member of the Association and that a levy of that amount was imposed on each member at an adjourned annual meeting held on 11th May last. The defender refused to pay on the ground that he was a member of the cage-bird section, which had been dissolved at the annual meeting. He maintained that he and the other members of the cage bird section had been practically put out of the Association, and that he was not therefore liable for any assessment which they might make. He further contended that the assessment was too large, and that the assets of the cage-bird section, including prize cups, etc., should have been realised and placed to the credit of the Association's account. The Sheriff held that the Association had not been dissolved, and that the defender had not taken the step of resigning his membership which was provided for by the rules. Even if he had done so, the Sheriff was not prepared to hold that that would free him from liability previously incurred, and it appeared that the levy had been made to cover past deficiency. With regard to the amount levied, the Sheriff held that the Association, being constituted for a lawful purpose, was entitled to make such reasonable assessment as it found necessary to meet its liabilities, and that it was not for him to examine the accounts. He therefore gave decree for the sum sued for, with expenses. Agents:—For the pursuer, Mr. J. M. Inglis; and for the defender, Mr. John Bain (of Messrs. Mackintosh and Bain)."

THOMAS SMITH.

INTERESTING FERTILISATION.

Some Muling Experiences.

SIR,—A singular case of fertilising of eggs has recently come under my notice, which I thought would be interesting to readers of C.B. I have a hen Canary which had brought up a nest of Mules. As the season was getting late, about August 1st, I did not think she would nest again. She had no cock with her since she last laid. One morning I found an egg in the nest, which I took away, and I parted off the young Mules, and turned in a cock Goldfinch; he was very rank and fast. She laid an egg on the two following days, which I let her sit on. Last Friday she hatched one young Mule out of the two eggs; this proves that eggs can be fertilised in a remarkably short time before being laid, less than 24 hours. I thought this worth recording. I have a Hybrid now well on seed, that was hatched from an egg laid by a hen Goldfinch in an aviary in which the only cock birds were a Linnet and Redpoll, so I am not certain which is the father. I hope to see more signs of the parentage when it moults. I think it is a cock. The hen Goldfinch laid two eggs in the seed-box, which I set under a Canary, both were hatched, one young bird died when about three weeks old. My particular fancies are Goldfinches and Mules. I have had a very poor season, got very few young, but this may be accounted for by the dreadful weather. I keep my birds in a building at the bottom of my garden. I have been years trying to get Canaries that would throw light Mules, and last year I bought two hens, and both have had light marked Mules in every nest, so I think I am lucky in getting such a strain. I believe the previous owner had not tried for Mules. They are very nice sized birds. I have only got one young Canary from each of them this year, but with these I shall hope to keep the strain. On some future occasion I may try and write you some particulars of the birds that have passed through my hands during the past fifty years. They range from the Golden Eagle to the Robin. Anything with feathers always fascinates me, and I think the fever is as strong now as it was forty years ago.

SCOTTISH-BRITISH B. AND M. C.

SIR,—Applications for our patronage are now pouring in daily. Societies desirous of same might please forward classification, Goldfinch and Bullfinch classes specially defined, British fanciers wishing to compete for our medals at Scottish shows, will please communicate with me. Members please oblige with annual subscription.

IS THE HOOPOE A BRITISH BIRD?

SIR,—In reply to Mr. R. Bond's query in last week's C.B., asking if the Hoopoe is a British bird, I would refer him to Vol. 1, No. 4, of the "Bird World," the front page of which gives an excellent illustration of the Hoopoe. The "Bird World" says the Hoopoe is a great traveller, being a summer migrant here, and often occurring in out-of-the-way places. It visits us regularly, and has bred where unmolested. I think it is only this year that the Hoopoe was added to the list of B.B. and M.C. The coming show season is likely to see a good many Hoopoes competing in the British bird class.

GEORGE RAESIDE.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. R. Bond's enquiry "Is the Hoopoe a British Bird?" there is no doubt at all about one or two being seen in this country annually, though I cannot say if any authentic record is known as to its having bred here. Last year I had one, found dead eight miles from here, a female bird, which certainly would have shortly laid eggs, but seemed to have flown against telegraph wires, as its head was almost off. Have seen two recorded in "The Field" this year.

A. T.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent R. Bond, the Hoopoe is a migrating bird, but not a regular one. It is stated to be only occasional in the British Isles. Therefore, had I been judging, I should have put it out of the British bird class. They say the Nile in Egypt swarms with these birds, as they feed upon the worms and grub they find there. They also frequent pasture and ploughed lands like the crow. It is more abundant on the Continent of Europe than in Britain, and its sojourn in temperate climates is but short, its arrival being late in the year, and its departure early. This migration is not universal, and it is well known they breed in and round about Egypt. Therefore, I don't think it is fair to call the Hoopoe a British bird, but the B.B. and M.C. may include them in their list.

C. E. SILK.

SIR,—We beg to state that the Hoopoe has long been recognised as a British bird by all writers on ornithology. Year by year specimens are recorded in different parts of England, and we believe there are authentic records of its breeding in this country, birds in mature plumage having been shot. Only a month or so ago one was seen in a park near Penge. With these authentic records in view, the N.B.B. and M.C. added the bird (with twenty-six other species) to their list about three months ago, and duly published in this journal. We shall be pleased to forward your correspondent same on receipt of stamp. The N.B.B. and M.C. have no jurisdiction over a judge awarding a prize to any bird not in the club's list. Take, for instance, the Meadow Bunting. Such a bird, if exhibited by a member and awarded a prize, would not be recognised to count for the club's cup and medals. Whether the bird your correspondent cites was a genuine caught British specimen, or not, it is not for us to say. Such a matter is left for the judge to form his own opinion.

BENGER'S

assists nature.

It is used mixed with fresh new milk and forms a delicate and nutritive cream which can be enjoyed and assimilated when other foods disagree. It is entirely free from rough and indigestible particles which produce irritation in delicate stomachs.

Mothers and interested persons are requested to write for Booklet, "Benger's Food and How to Use it." This contains a "Concise Guide to the Rearing of Infants," and practical information on the care of Invalids, Convalescents, and the Aged. Post free on application to Benger's Food Ltd., Outer Works, Manchester.

CANARY-BULLY AT CAMBRIDGE.

SIR,—On looking over the report of our show, held on August 5th, I see I am credited with first special in the Mule Class with a Greenfinch and Canary Mule. This is an error, as the bird in question is a genuine cross between the Canary and Bullfinch.

C. G. WILLIAMS.

SPLIT IN THE TIDESWELL POULTRY & CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

SIR,—The cage bird section of the above society will in future hold their annual show for cage birds only (poultry excluded), and hope to have the support and patronage of their friends and exhibitors as in the past. The show is to be held under the rules of the C.B.U. Show date and particulars will be announced later.

BAGSHAWE AND SWARBRICK, Hon. Secs.

NOTTINGHAM PERMANENT O.S.

SIR,—May I inform your readers in this district, that the above society has opened its membership to a radius of ten miles outside the borough. Any fancier wishing to become a member will be made welcome. We hold our next meeting at the "Shoulder of Mutton," Market Place, on Saturday, August 31st, at 8 o'clock, and our next show on October 19th. Mr. J. Richards, of Sutton-in-Ashfield, will judge.

WHITE SWALLOWS AT EAST LEARMOUTH.

SIR,—On August 14th I saw at East Learmouth, near Cornhill-on-Tweed, a pure white Swallow. It was a young bird, and had seemingly newly left the nest, as it was flying low, and was scarcely full up in feather yet. There was not a single dark feather to be seen.

J. W. BRUCE.

NEW SOCIETY IN DUNDALK.

SIR,—It is with much pleasure that I have learned that at last Dundalk, the capital of Co. Louth, is organising a Cage Bird Society. There are many fanciers residing in this large town, with its population of over 14,000, and I am sure they will welcome and support such a society. I am glad to say that we have amongst our many fanciers two of our Irish champion exhibitors, and those gentlemen are, I believe, about to start this society. I refer to Mr. Rowe, V.P.Y.C.C., Ireland, of 2, McDermott's-terrace, and Mr. Coynee, D.I.N.T., 50, Castle-road, Dundalk, and I trust every fancier will do his utmost to support and assist these gentlemen in the task they have set before them. All intending members should send their names to either of these gentlemen at an early date.

J. CUNNINGHAM.

COAL-TAR AS A REMEDY FOR ASTHMA.

SIR,—I was rather astonished at being asked on Saturday by a customer for Liquor Resi Carbona, B.P. 1898. Let him, and good knowledge of the B.P., but could not call to mind any such preparation in it. On inquiring its purpose, I was shown a letter by Mr. A. Rothwell, in your valuable paper as a cure for asthma in cage birds. There is no such preparation in the B.P., and I am not at all surprised to see that Mr. Rothwell failed to obtain same, if he asked for Liq. Resi Carbona, B.P. 1898. Let him, and others, ask for Wright's solution of Coal Tar and I do not think many chemists, even those of country places, will be unable to supply him. I should be obliged if you will print my letter for the guidance for other fanciers.

ERNEST C. HARDEN, M.P.S.

HEATING APPARATUS REQUIRED.

SIR,—I think it will be of interest to your correspondent, Mr. Claude Cowper, to know that I have used, both in my bird room and also dog kennel, for small pet dogs, a single gas boiler that costs very little to maintain, and the temperature is very easily regulated. Moreover, it does not take up much room, and is easily fixed. It is made by Mr. J. Dewhurst, 52, North End-road, West Kensington, who, being an eminent bird fancier, would only be glad to supply Mr. Claude Cowper with particulars.

H.G.

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUBS.

International Triangular Contest.

SIR,— Noticing that Mr. D. Smith states that we could not come into line with a contest with the two clubs, I might mention that the reason was, that our committee could not see its way clear to ask our members to send their birds to Scotland two years running and only once either at home or on the map district of the Norwich Plainhead Club. Our members would have been put to great expense, and then beaten by numbers. No, when our friends of the Scottish Club give or take fair, then it will be possible to make arrangements, but not take all and give none, while I am the humble servant of the Southern Norwich Plainhead Club.

F. S. MATTHIAS.

WINTERING FOREIGN BIRDS.

SIR,—The time is not now far distant when most keepers of foreign birds in outdoor aviaries begin to think about taking their stock indoors. This, however, may be done too soon, particularly with birds that have already spent a summer out of doors, and are fairly well acclimatised. There is no doubt that this class of bird will, in very many cases, prove hardier and thrive better in the open during the colder months than they would do indoors without the aid of artificial heat. There is, in fact, comparatively little analogy between the conditions indoors and in the open air, even when, to all appearances, they are very similar, and a bird's capacity to resist cold in a good large space for exercise in the open simply bears no comparison whatever with the resistance indoors. Damp and wet are far greater enemies to birds than cold, for which reason the two first essentials to be provided in any aviary should be a well-drained floor and a covered roof, to keep out the rain. Given such conditions, none but the most delicate species and recently-imported birds need be taken in yet awhile. Indeed, it is more than likely that specimens imported this year and placed out during the summer are already sufficiently inured to the vagaries of our climate to remain out altogether, unless there should be quite an exceptionally severe winter in store for us, the cool, inclement season being quite sufficient to accomplish a fair amount of acclimatisation—certainly enough for the hardier species. A few notes on the subject of feather plucking in Parrots may not be without interest, although we have already heard so many causes, and cures, and suggestions about this disfiguring habit that it is difficult to suggest anything new. But this is no suggestion for cure. In the first case, a Parrakeet, belonging to an amateur aviarist, well versed in knowledge of the proper management of Parrots, was rescued from a fire which broke out in the bird-room. The bird had never plucked a feather before, but from that time it became a feather plucker, in spite of all efforts to restrain it, but with this difference (the term feather plucker is used here simply as a convenient term), that instead of plucking out the feathers it contented itself with first nibbling off the ends of the feathers and trimming off the webs, so that it never became really bare. In another case, a Cockatoo belonging to a friend was allowed complete liberty out of doors to roam about a park, lawn, and garden, which it did quite freely, and returned to the house at will. Yet this bird became a confirmed feather plucker, notwithstanding that it had practically as much liberty of action, and almost as much occupation, as a purely wild bird. Now, in these cases the cause could not have been associated with errors of diet, nor lack of occupation, as a both cases the habit was equally ineradicable. What, then, is it? Is it merely an individual habit of nervous origin somewhat analogous to the embarrassment of the self-conscious boy or girl who bite their finger nails, or the contemplative man who unconsciously chews the ends of his "face furniture"? One point that may now begin to be controlled by the aviarist is the breeding arrangements of the small and delicate Finches and Waxbills. Little good can now be expected to come of their efforts in this direction, and the chilly nights and temporary day chills that may now be expected are apt to work much mischief among the smaller birds. Still, where young are in the nest, or soon expected to be there, they have a decidedly better chance of being reared than at almost any other time in the year, as the seedy grasses and weeds which may now be gathered in abundance are no small aid in rearing this class of bird.

EXOTIC.

LINNET MULES FOSTERED BY A CARDINAL.

SIR,—It may be of interest to your numerous readers to know that in my outdoor aviary I have a cock red-crested Cardinal which has taken upon himself the duties of foster-father to a nest of Linnet Canary Mules. He has fed them most assiduously since they were about three days old, and will not allow the mother to go near them. He feeds them on egg food, but also gives them meal worms and any insects he catches. They have now left the nest, and will, I hope, continue to do well. A. W. SHAW.

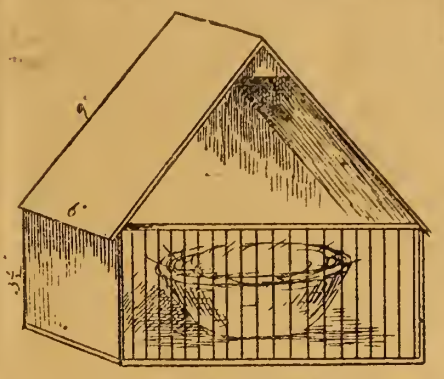
THE TAKING OF WASPS' NESTS.

SIR,—In a very interesting and instructive article by Mr. T. H. Kinch on "The Blackcap," in your issue of August 10th, he recommends wasp grubs, and says, "In nest taking the process is very simple indeed." Would he be kind enough to tell us his way of taking them, for wasp nests are all too plentiful just now, and I think many fanciers, beside myself, would be glad to take out the nests if if they knew some way of doing so without spoiling the comb or being unduly punished by the inmates. COLONIST.

MR. HADWIN ON COLOUR FEEDING.

SIR,—I was very much interested in Mr. Hadwin's lecture on colour feeding, and would like to ask him to put me right on the following questions. He mentions two ounces of citrate of iron and one pound of honey. Will he tell me how much rum it will take to dissolve the iron, and whether the honey or rum, or both, will affect the colour of the birds, or make it hotter and better? I also noticed that he spoke very strongly in favour of adding olive oil to the colour food, and I would like him to explain the following for me. I never used olive oil before this season, and when I used to mix the colour food with my egg food, also the castor sugar, I used to find my hands very much stained with the colouring matter Now, this season I have added one ounce of olive oil to one pound of colour food and half a pound of sugar, and when I mixed the colour food I was surprised to find that my hands were not so much stained as when I used no olive oil. Will he explain this to me, for I was thinking that if the colour food with the oil added had no more effect on the birds' blood than it had on my hands, it would be a bad job. I had expected the oil to extract the colour from the colour food, so that my hands would have been redder than before. I would be much obliged for his advice on this. Will he also tell me if it is possible to use too much olive oil, and what effects it would have? I would like to add that I am using Mr. Sandiford's Royal Red and Mr. Ramsden's best hot Natal. Would Mr. Hadwin advise me to add two ounces of olive oil to each pound of colour food, in face of Sandiford's instruction that no oil is needed, as he does not believe in it, because it keeps the birds too relaxed to gain colour. I mean would my birds be hotter in colour if I added olive oil? And will he tell me if one egg with the necessary biscuits and colour food is sufficient for 50 birds to colour feed them properly for show, or should one egg only do for about 30 birds? Another thing I would like to know correctly, Mr. Hadwin. When the bird is moulted up to the head and neck, and you reduce the strength of the feed, how much do you reduce it; is one half too big a reduction? J. TAYLOR.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS



Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

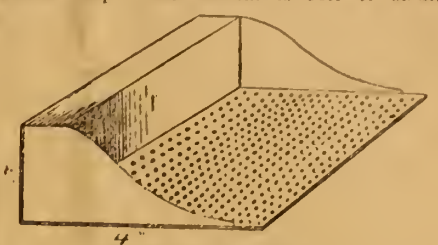
A SAFETY NEST GUARD.

Sent by P. Stubbs, 23b, Well Street, Winsford, Cheshire.

Enclosed is a sketch of a safety nest guard. You can put any kind of nest box in it, and there is no fear that the young will fall on the floor of the aviary. I have used this box for eight years, and find it answers well.

Safety Nest Guard.



It is 9 inches across the front, 6 inches deep, 3½ inches high to the roof, and the roof is 9 inches each side. It is all wood except the wire bars in front, and these enable you to see the young in the nest without disturbing them.

No. 130.

A NOVEL CAGE CLEANER.

Sent by S. Reed, Ivesley Cottages, Waterhouses, Durham.

The enclosed sketch is that of an article which I use for cleaning out my breeding cages, which have no sand tray or turn rail. It is 4 inches long, 3 inches wide, and 2 inches deep. The bottom is full of small holes to allow the sand to run through. It is easily made with a piece of wood and tin, and can be sized according to the width of the cage doors. By its use a cage may be cleaned in a very short time, and it is also a great saver of sand.

The Housing and Treatment of Foreign Birds in Captivity.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Of the numerous other genus I can only take the following species in passing.

ORANGE-RUMPED GREEN TANAGER (Chlorochrysa calliparia).—This is an exceptionally fine species, mostly clad in shining grass green and a spot on the crown, golden orange; throat, black; patch on either side of neck, chestnut; middle of abdomen, bluish; under-side of tail, black, which is also the colour of bill, legs, and feet. Total length, 4¾ inches, tail 1⅞ inches. Indigenous to Ecuador, Colombia, and Peru.

WHITE-CAPPED TANAGER (Stephanophorus leucocephalus).—At the Crystal Palace Show of 1903, Mr. J. A. Swan exhibited a fine specimen of this species, from which the following notes were taken:—General body colourfi, black with a tsrong bluish sheen, which is brightest on the rump and sides of the head; back of head, silky white, with a small crimson crest in front of same; bill, blackish-brown, lower mandible paler; legs and feet, lark brown. Total length, 7 inches, tail 3⅜ inches. A handsome, striking, and desirable species, and much to be regretted that it is not oftener on the market. It is a native of Argentina.

CROWNED TANAGER (Tachyphonus coronatus).—A desirable, if not showy, species, which soon adapts itself to cage life, and is of a confiding and vivacous demeanour. General plumage, shining black; a small crimson crest runs longitudinally across the centre of head, which is not visivle when the bird is at rest, but at other times a lovely streak of carmine crimson imparts quite a distinguished appearance to the bird; lesser wing coverts, white; bill, blackish horn; legs and feet, dark brown. Total length, 6¾ inches, tail, 3 inches. Described from a living specimen at the Zoo. The female is of a rusty-brown colour, lighter on the lower surface, and slightly flecked with cinerous. It is a native of South-Eastern Brazil.

THE VIOLET TANAGER (Euphonia violacea).—This pretty and well-known species inhabits Guiana, Trinidad, Lower Amazonia, and S.E. Brazil. Though not georgously apparalled, both sexes have beautiful plumage, and must, when in condition, be numbered among the more handsome members of the Tanagridae.

The adult male is dark shining violet blue on the upper surface, with lighter margins to most of the feathers; front of the head, orange-yellow; under-surface, orange yellow, vential region much paler; bill, bluish black; legs and feet, blackish. Total length, 3⅞ inches, tail, 1⅜ inches.

The adult female is olive-green, strongly washed with yellow; the edges of the coverts and flights are more or less narrowly edged with yellowish-olive. This species mostly comes to hand in a somewhat poor condition, and is rathe rdifficult to acclimatise; but with a roomy cage, fresh air, but freedom from draught, an unlimited supply of soft, ripe fruit, a good soft food mixture containing a good proportion of crumbed sponge cake, mealworms if it will eat them, and its cage kept strictly clean, will bring most of these beautiful and interesting birds safely through the critical period immediately succeeding importation.

Euphonia minuta.—A small and beautiful species, being but little larger than a Flower Picker; active, alert, and fairly confiding, it certainly ought not to be confined in a small cage; one large enough to take in two growing plants (which should be in flower) in pots, and with these frequently changed, a time. With the birds flitting to and fro series of four or five plants would last some among these, the effect is very fine, and the birds most interesting. Note: I mean on open-fronted box cage, not a miniature greenhouse.

Adult male.—The upper surface is shining greenish-black; upper back and neck, purplish-black; front of head, yellow; under-surface, bright yellow, merging into white on the lower abdomen and vential region; the throat is purplish-black; bill, blackish; legs and feet, black, slightly bluish. Total length, 3⅜ inches, tail, 1⅛ inches.

Adult female.—Olive green above, and yellowish olive below; throat and centre of abdomen whitish. Described from life. Habitat, according to Museum Cat.: Guiana, Lower Amazonia, Colombia, Panama, and Central America up to Guatemala.

With this species I must bring to a close what has been a very pleasant task, viz.: the describing of some of the gorgeous and regal members of the family Tanagridae. While not as comprehensive as it should be, yet I think it may be fairly claimed that it is more so than in any work that has yet been published of this character.

In conclusion, I would repeat that the great majority may be kept in outdoor aviaries all the year round, providing there is a roomy and well-lighted shed as a night shelter, and also during severe weather. During the past winter many have been so kept, and the losses with those out of doors has been less than with those kept indoors.

Moulting, and what it means.

By C. A. HOUSE.

Extracts from a Lecture given before the Members of the South-West London C.B.S. on August 8th.

In his opening remarks Mr. House referred to the fact that the moulting season is generally spoken of as the moulting sickness, which he thought was somewhat of a misnomer as what is a regular annual natural process can hardly be called a sickness. On the other hand the moult is ordained by nature to prevent sickness and ill-health, and enable birds to fulfil the ordinary functions of life. One thing is certain, that unless a bird moults properly, be it old or young, it will be quite unable to properly play its part in the breeding arrangements of the succeeding year.

AN ANXIOUS TIME.

The moulting season is an anxious one with most fanciers; anxiety is caused during its progress in many ways. It is during the moult that many a promising youngster is made or marred. The moult it is which finds out the weak spots in a bird's constitution, and the moult it is which causes to develop faults and failings not seen in the first feather. On the other hand, it must also be said that many a bird little thought of before the moult blossoms out into a winner of firsts, specials, and cups owing to the care bestowed upon it, and by the manner in which it comes through the moult. The moulting, or the changing of the plumage in birds, is like unto the shedding of their foliage by the trees. The process is somewhat similar, and yet it is altogether different. Similar in so far as the shedding of the plumage is concerned, but totally different inasmuch as a bird, in addition to shedding its old coat, has to grow a new one at the same time, a process which the tree delays till the springtime. The leaves on a tree grow and grow till such time as their veins are filled with the matter from which they obtain life. There is then a suspension of the growing process, the leaves hold on for a time, but owing to the fact that in leaves, as in other things, there can be no life without circulation, so after a time the leaves begin to wither and then drop off. In somewhat the same manner does a feather grow, then gradually loses its strength, and drops away. To thoroughly understand the moulting of a bird, one needs to have some knowledge of the structure of feathers. If we take a feather and carefully examine it, we find that it is, roughly speaking, composed of three parts—the quill, the shaft, the vein. By the former is the feather held to the skin of the bird, the shaft grows out of the quill, running up the centre of the feather, and to the shaft is the vein attached. The feather grows and is nourished directly from the blood through a small opening at the bottom through which the sustenance for the feather is drawn during the whole time it is growing. This, like the veins of the leaves of a tree, in time becomes choked by the accumulation of the secretions of chemical matter, and the feather, like the leaf, falls away from its support, because it is no longer nourished and strengthened.

A WONDERFUL MYSTERY.

The moulting process is marvellous when one comes to think of it. At this time the canary, in common with other birds, from the elements contained in its own body, produces the forces which cause its old coat to be cast off and a new one to grow in all its living, glowing pristine beauty. We are so used to this wonderful process that we never stay to think of its miraculousness. Did we first see a bird moult without knowing anything about it we should be awestruck by the wonderfulness of the mystery, but because we grow up with it, and our eye is trained to it, we fail to stop and think of all that the process is and means. In the moulting of a canary the old is replaced by the new, as in many other things. Life produces life, and from the decay of life fresh life springs. The moult commences by the desiccation of the old feathers; the quills become dry and lifeless, all the sap is dried out of them, they lose their strength and firmness, the web loses its lustre and depth of colour, the quills shrink within their sockets, the surrounding skin becomes shrivelled, and like the leaves on the trees they drop off. Immediately the old feather has dropped out the new begins to fill its place, even if it, like the second tooth of a child, has not already had something to do with the ousting of its forerunner. It is obvious to all, even the merest tyro in natural history, or ornithology, that the time of the moult must of necessity be a time of severe strain on the birds. Not only have they to keep up the natural forces of their body, but they have also to supply from the source of these forces the material, or food, to grow another crop of feathers. This must naturally have a most exhausting and enervating effect on the internal economy of birds undergoing the process. This being so, it becomes our duty to see what we can do to assist our pets to go through the moult with the least amount of discomfort possible.

NEEDFUL AND DESIRABLE FACTORS.

First and foremost we know that warmth is a most desirable and necessary factor in the accomplishment of a quick, healthy, and successful moult. A quick moult is, usually, a healthy moult, and an healthy moult is, generally speaking, a successful one. Nature herself has chosen the most fitting time—the end of summer, when the earth is full of heat from the rays of the sun which have been pouring down upon it for some weeks, and which keeps the nights almost as warm as the days, as at night, when the sun is not shining, the earth gives off its stored heat, thus equalising the temperature of day and night. To secure the full benefit of this provision of Nature want to see to it that the moult in our stock is not delayed. An early moult is a quick one. A late moult is a slow one, caused by the fact that the atmospherical surroundings are not so favourable, and that as a consequence the moult is retarded, and very often unforeseen and undesirable complications ensue.

WHEN TO STOP BREEDING.

With the end of June fanciers should begin to think of putting away all the appurtenances of the breeding season. The sooner breeding is finished the sooner will the old birds drop into moult—that is, the body moult; the big quill feathers are already on the move. In this connection it should be noted that the older a Canary becomes the longer it takes to moult. Thus very old and choice favourites of the stud should not have more than two nests of youngsters taken from them, so as to ensure their getting well through the moult. Only the other night, at a meeting of the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, a young fancier, a first season man, came to me in great distress. He has four pairs of birds up, and he has not bred a youngster. "What shall I do to get my hens to lay? They go to nest, and sit! sit!! sit!!! But they will not lay." I discovered in the course of conversation that his stock was pretty old ere it came into his hands, and that the hens were bred with late last summer. Their late owner did badly last year, and bred late on in the season in his endeavour to repay himself for the early misfortunes. As a consequence, the hens were so pumped out that this year they have not laid an egg—not one of the four! Their present owner wanted to know what he could do with them. My advice was, "Stop breeding at once, get them moulted through early, give them plenty of flying room, and then next season you might be able to get something from them." One old friend of mine goes even further than I do. He will not allow anything to hatch in his aviary after the end of June. I think eggs laid in June may be hatched, but certainly it is not wise to hatch those laid in July, if you want the birds, either old or young, to have a successful moult. Late breeding means late moulting.

WARMTH THE FIRST FACTOR.

Warmth being an essential factor in a successful moult, fanciers should see to it that their birds are enabled to get the full benefit of all the warmth which the sun gives, and that they are protected from draughts. Draughts are fatal to Canaries under any circumstances, more especially during the moulting season. So serious are the effects of a chill caught by exposure to draught during the moult that they often stop the moult altogther, causing the birds unnecesary pain, checking the moult with consequent illness, and sometimes death, and even if death does not supervene the birds are reduced to a poor state of health, and never recover sufficiently from the effects of the bad moult to be ready to take their places in the breeding cages later on. During the moult birds are more or less without their full complement of clothes, and thus are very liable to attacks of cold or chill. Therefore, it is the more necessary at this time to exercise the greater care in their management. Warmth is better supplied inwardly than outwardly. Good nourishing flesh-forming food should be given. A bird to moult well wants to be a little bit above itself, so to speak. A plump, fleshy bird would moult better than a thin one, because it has more reserve of force to withstand the strain of performing the double function of keeping life going, and growing a new coat.

IN DAYS OF OLD.

Mr. House went on to give some interesting facts relating to the early days of colour feeding, and mentioned many things which had been tried to influence the colour of Canaries ere fanciers stumbled on to the present tasteless pepper. He also gave some amusing incidents relating to the K.N. and non-K.N.-fed days in the time of Blakston, Bemrose, Thackrey; and other great fanciers. These were followed by general practical remarks dealing with the giving of colour food, in which the lecturer strongly urged his readers to buy the pure, natural, unadulterated article, be it hot or tasteless, and do the mixing themselves. One thing to be remembered was that the pepper which looked the deepest in colour was not always the best. Brightness and cleanliness were more important than mere depth, which was often artificially produced by the mixing of oil, sugar, and other ingredients. A clammy, sticky appearance about a sample of pepper generally denoted the presence of foreign substances. Many men thought that if a sample of tasteless pepper stained everything it came near, and made it as deep a colour as itself, it was all right. That was a mistake. It generally meant that the sample had been doctored. A little oil well mixed with tasteless pepper would set the colouring matter free.

NEED OF GREEN FOOD AND IRON.

Touching upon green food, Mr. House said that he believed in the giving of green food right through the moult. Not a lot, but just a small sprig day by day. The reason why, was that the giving of colour food was apt to clog the liver, and if this happened the birds came out patchy. To obtain the best results from colour-feeding, the liver must be kept working, or else half the value of the colour food the end of the moult, but to enrich the blood, but passed away into the excreta. Iron, also, in some form or other, was of great benefit during the moult. Its chief purpose was not as many thought, to tighten the feathers at the end of the moult, but to enrich the blood, tone the system, thus aid in the deposition of colour in the plumage, and also to correct the tendency to laxitiveness in the bowels which was often present during the time of colour feeding A little citrate of iron, or sulphate of iron, given in the drinking water three times a week was most beneficial. In cases of slow moulting, a pinch of flowers of sulphur mixed with the food once a day often acted in a manner most advantageous.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Birds I have Kept.

By J. JONES (Dudley).

A Lecture delivered before the City of Birmingham C.B.S.

THE RING OUSEL.

This bird is very seldom seen on the show bench now. I used to be very fond of keeping a Ring Ousel. It is much after the style and shape of the Blackbird. It is not so dense in colour as the Blackbird, but seems to be pencilled from the beak to end of its tail. You will also find the same pencilling on its white crescent-shaped throat marking, which seems to give it a dirty white looking appearance. The bill, legs, and feet, differ from the Blackbirds in being of a dusky grey brown colour. I would not recommend any one to keep a Ring Ousel in a small cage. Do what you will, you cannot keep it as clean as you would wish, but if you have an outside aviary the Ring Ousel will prove a very interesting pet. It has no song to speak of, only a kind of very shrill whistle, which it seems to utter in quick succession, something like we hear the Blackbird do when it commences to sing its song. It is easily kept in good condition on any food with which you feed your Thrushes or Blackbirds, but it does not seem to care very much for fruit, I could never get any of mine to touch it. The Ring Ousel soon settles down to cage life, becomes very tame, and as it always seems in good condition and plumage, it makes a good exhibition bird. Further it will stand any amount of knocking about, and this enhances its value, but as you generally have to show it in the variety class it does not always get what it deserves, as some judges think it only worth one of the "codding cards," when very often it should have stood high up in the prize list.

THE STONE CHAT.

This is a bird seldom seen on the show bench now, although Stone Chats are very nice and attractive-looking. It has a very striking appearance and is interesting to all visitors at shows, for they all seem to want to know what bird it is. The cock in his spring plumage has a very nice black head and throat, good deep reddish-brown breast, the flights and tail are nearly all black, the under parts and tail coverts are light brown, the rump is pure white, the legs and bill jet black. Then its pure white collar sets the other colours off to perfection. The Stone Chats will live very well on hard-boiled eggs, ant eggs, and dried flies, made crumbly moist, with a grated carrot, or a boiled potato; they seem very fond of live gentles, and the bluebottle fly. When Stone-Chats are fresh caught, place them in a dark cage with a canvas top and side, and wired only in the front. The reason why is because when fresh caught they are very wild and soon damage their flight feathers. I never put any perches in the cage till they have been caught about four or five days, but put a good layer of garden soil at the bottom of their cage, plenty of live ants and their eggs, and a good supply of gentles. Some prefer to feed them all on meal worms the first few days, but I don't think they take to the other food so well when fed on these to any great extent. Give them a good mixture of eggs and live ants and they will very soon tame down. If you intend them for show, get a cage about fourteen inches long and ten inches high with a canvas top, and about seven inches deep. I like a nice green enamelled cage with food and water vessels to fit inside of cage. When sending them to a show put a good supply of wasp grub in the cage so that they may have something to eat if the stewards do not know how to feed them, for I have found when mine have arrived home from a show the cage bottom has been nearly covered over with nothing but canary seed.

MULES.

In breeding Mules much loss of time and many disappointments are caused very often by too early pairing. Now in the first place it must not be forgotten that young birds require a great amount of warmth, not all artificial heat, but the warm rays of the sun. As a rule, birds which are bred in cold and frosty weather seldom reach the age of maturity, as they do not seem to have the strength to get over the trying period of the moult. I will try and explain to you how it is the majority of young fanciers fail in Mule and Hybrid breeding, and I think I have not far to seek. In the first place they never think of getting their birds till it is time to commence breeding operations, and then think all they have to do is to put them together like canaries, and if they do not breed as free as they wish they throw up the hobby with disgust. Now if they had bought, say half-a-dozen Greypates in September, then turned them into a good flight and moulted them off with some canaries, they would have had some of them breed without a doubt. I find the Goldfinch-Canary is one of the easiest Mules to breed. You should make a point of leaving your Finches with hens till the end of March, and then cage them off separately. It is then time to begin to change their food, for in addition to their ordinary seed I give the Finches a good supply of thistle heads every day to pick at, and three times a week a little egg food with just a pinch of maw seed added. If my brother fanciers will follow the above I think they will be more successful in the future than they have been in the past.

HINTS ON BREEDING.

In breeding Mules I always advise new fanciers to use a double compartment cage, one with a sliding partition in the centre; then put the hen one side and the Goldfinch the other. As soon as you see them feeding through the wire division, it will show that they are getting paired. You can then remove the slide and let the Goldfinch in with the hen, having previously put in the nest pan some moss, hair, etc., for them to build with. They will require a little attention, for you will often find the Finch will pull the nesting material out as fast as the hen carries it in. For this reason I always advise everyone to use a felt or a swansdown lining for the nest pan, and if the Finch does pull the nest about you still have the felt lining which answers just as well. When the hen has built her nest you will have to keep a sharp look-out for the first egg, and this is where the sliding division comes in useful, for at night you can part the Finch from the hen, and when you take the egg away next morning let the Goldfinch into the hen again. I find it is not necessary to keep the Finch with the hen after she has laid her second egg, for she does not require him during the time of incubation.

TESTING THE EGGS.

After the hen has been sitting five or six days it is as well to have a look to see if the eggs are fertile or not. If unfertile, throw them away, as it is no use the hen wasting more time than is necessary to see if they are good. During the time of incubation I never give the hens anything only plain canary seed, till a day or two before they are due to hatch, and then I give a little egg food with a pinch of maw seed added to it. When the young are about three days old I commence to use bread with the egg, and also give them a good supply of green stuff such as lettuce, watercress, chickweed, etc. When they are ten days old I give the hen a good supply of scalded rape in a separate vessel. I keep them on this food till they are ready to leave the nest, and then I give a good supply of crushed hemp with the canary seed. I make a rule of caging them off when they are 21 days old, for then they can eat and look after themselves. Young Mules leave the nest quite a week earlier than canaries, but I still keep them on the food I advised above till they are six weeks old. When the young are about 18 days old the hen will be thinking of going to nest again, therefore, keep her well supplied with nesting materials, as else some day when you go into the room you will find some of the young badly plucked.

HOW TO OBTAIN LIGHT MULES.

I expect some of you will be expecting a word or two from me with regard to light muling. I may say this is where the art of muling comes in. You will also want to know where to get a good reliable muling strain of hens from. You will find plenty of them advertised in the Fancy papers at about three or four shillings each, but take my advice and have nothing to do with them, for if you do it will only end in failure. Light muling hens are in very few hands, and those who have them seem very loth to part with them unless you are prepared to pay a good price, and I think it is only fair, after all the trouble one has to take to get them to throw the light Mules we all like so very much, but very seldom can obtain. Anyone going in for light Mules cannot do better than get the largest yellow Norwich hen they can find, pair her to a good Lancashire Plainhead, and then another season pair the young of these together—that is, brother and sister. Then in about a couple of years time you will perhaps succeed in breeding a good strain of muling birds, more commonly called "Sibs." In conclusion, allow me to thank you, one and all, for your very kind attention.

A Chat about Birds.

Some Simple Facts for Students.

Lecture by the Rev. K. A. DEAKIN, at the Redditch Institute, on February 11th, 1907.

CERTAIN SUSPICIOUS CHARACTERS.

He had tried to be as moderate in his remarks as he could, but it was a subject on which he felt strongly. He would not care to say that all birds should be protected and preserved, but there was a vast difference between preservation and extermination. There were, indeed, birds of which it is easily possible to have too many. No one would, he supposed, grieve much over the extermination of that New Zealand Parrot which had developed such a horrible liking for feeding on the kidneys of living sheep. Nor had he much to say in favour of our own Carrion Crow. The Sparrow Hawk he would relegate to those large woodland districts where game-preserving was not much thought of. The Jay and the Magpie might also be kept in their due limits.

As to the smaller birds, it was impossible to help feeling, when, long before the grain was ripe, they saw numberless ears of corn quite threshed out, that there were too many Sparrows in the world. The Bullfinch, too, was responsible for a great deal of damage among the fruit-buds, but the bird-catchers looked after them too well for them to be ever very numerous. The large flocks of Wood Pigeons which they saw in the autumn and winter months no doubt did very serious injury to the farmer, but, with these few exceptions, they might fairly say that the good the birds did far outweighed the harm, and if they were to be killed down too mercilessly they might easily have—on a smaller scale, of course—a repetition of that disaster which the poet Longfellow had so forcibly described in one of his "Tales of a Wayside Inn"—"The Birds of Killingworth."

There was another, and a very wanton, case of bird-destruction, which must fill every right-thinking man with indignation. After the close season was over, tourists to the Yorkshire coast about Flamborough Head (and on other coasts, too), were in the habit of going out in boats from which they shoot at the sea fowl as they fly round, and that this was done for a more love of slaughter was amply evidenced by the fact that in very many cases they did not even trouble to pick up the bodies of their victims. And this they call "sport!" It was a crying evil, and one which, as he thought, the law should take steps to punish. This was not a very pleasant subject to dwell upon, and he was glad to leave it, but he found it quite impossible to pass it by unnoticed.

THE SEARCH FOR FOOD.

A great many of our birds were migratory, i.e., they did not pass the whole of the year in this country. Those birds were divided into summer and winter migrants, according to the season of the year that they spent with us. Occasionally they found a winter migrant staying throughout the summer, but he had never yet heard of a summer migrant spending the winter here. The cause of migration was, without doubt, the search for their proper food, which (especially in the case of insectivorous birds) was intimately connected with temperature. Some migrants appeared annually on almost the same date, but others were more influenced by the character of the season, whether it were mild or severe, and from the early or late appearance of some birds—Wild Geese for instance—a severe or mild winter was often procrastinated.

When they saw some of their little summer migrants, such as the Chiff-Chaff, or the Willow-Wren, or the Redstart, flitting about their hedges, it seemed almost impossible that they should have sufficient powers of flight to carry them over the sea, but when they came to remember that the flight of a bird varied from 50 to 150 miles an hour, they saw that it was possible, though even then they could not but feel wonder that creatures so small and frail should be endowed with strength sufficient for flight so rapid.

It was believed that birds of passage (as they were often called), regularly returned to the same localities which they had frequented in former years; indeed, in the case of Swallows, this had been proved to be the case. In connection with this, he was once a little puzzled. In 1905 a Red-backed Shrike built and reared its brood in a hedge just outside his garden. This bird lays two distinct types of eggs—the one pinkish with salmon-coloured spots, the other with greenish-grey spots on a greyish ground. The eggs of his bird were of the first type, so, when last year a nest was built within a few yards of the one of the year before, he naturally concluded that the eggs would be the same colour, but they were of the grey type. This nest was, unfortunately, destroyed, but the birds built again (also laying grey eggs) in his garden, where they reared their brood.

He might add that in each year—to his great disappointment—he was unable to find their "shambles," though he did find one bumble-bee on a thorn near the nest in his garden. Perhaps he ought to explain that the Shrike had a habit of hanging up for a time such food (mice, young birds, bees, beetles, etc.), as it did not require for immediate consumption, which habit had given it its name of "Butcher-bird." What he should like to know was—supposing the original birds to have revisited their former haunts—why didn't they keep to one type of egg?—(laughter.)

A SUBJECT OF INTEREST.

Even in the case of birds which did not leave this country, there was often a partial migration southwards in the winter, and especially so with those which joined together in flocks during the winter months. While speaking of these flocks, it was worth mentioning that the males and females of the Chaffinch formed distinct flocks, from which this bird derived its specific name of cælebs (a bachelor).

The whole subject of the migration of birds was full of interest, particularly with reference to the instinct by which they were guided, an instinct which, in the case of caged birds, showed itself by a great restlessness when the season for migration came on. There was a special charm connected with some of those migrants, and the first sound of the Cuckoo's note, or the first sight of the Swallow speeding like an arrow through the air, were eagerly looked for, and gladly welcomed as sure signs of the approach of summer; while the October moon is associated by sportsmen with the arrival of that much sought after bird, the Woodcock.

SONG IS THE TRUMP CARD

Our native birds—with the exception of the Kingfisher—were not, as a rule, remarkable for any great brilliancy of colouring, but many of them made ample amends for their soberness of hue by the sweetness of their song, which was so conspicuously absent in the gorgeous birds of foreign lands. There must be but few, if any, who would exchange the melody of the little brown Nightingale for the most splendidly plumaged bird which dazzled the eye in tropical countries.

And sober in tone as they might seem to the casual observer, yet when they came to be closely examined, the various tints blended with each other, and made a most harmonious whole. He (the speaker) had often been amazed at the surprise expressed at the beauty of the common little Cock Sparrow. When viewed closely, and indeed, when in its spring dress, it was really a very handsome bird; while the little Jenny Wren, which, as it hopped about, seemed to be of one uniform brown, but was really most delicately pencilled in shades of brown and grey.

UNSUSPECTED BEAUTIES.

But perhaps the most lovely blending of sober colours was to be found in the owls, and even more so in the goat-sucker, the exquisite beauty of whose colouring had to be seen to be believed. Even the Rook and Crow, which in the distance appeared to be of a solemn black, had their feathers shot with blue and purple; while the seemingly black tail of that handsome fellow, the Magpie, shone with all the colours of the rainbow. Indeed, take what they might, they would find a beauty of colouring such as many did not even dream of.

In many instances the soberness of colouring was a great source of protection. Unless they had proved it for themselves they would hardly believe how difficult it was to detect a hen Pheasant, a Partridge, or a Wild Duck, when on the nest. And the same held good with regard to most of the birds which made their nest on the ground, as well as to the eggs themselves. The beautifully marked eggs of the Goat-sucker (which were, to his mind, the most beautiful of all our British eggs) harmonized so admirably with the stony ground on which they were laid that it required a very keen eye to detect them; while the difficulty, to an inexperienced eye of finding Plovers' eggs had become almost proverbial, so much do their olive-brown eggs, mottled with black, resemble their surroundings.

CURIOUS CONTRADICTIONS.

It was just the same with the eggs of the Skylark, while it was even more difficult to detect the eggs of the little Ringed Plover, which were generally laid on a shingly beach above high-water mark; or those of the Thick-knee, or Stone Curlew, which breeds in stony fields in the eastern counties.

In those cases the birds trusted only to the colour of the eggs for protection, but often birds were at wonderful pains to hide their nests. He had known a Whinchat's nest which almost defied detection, even by practised eyes; but of all nests the most cunningly hidden was that of the Grasshopper Warbler, whose name was derived from its curious note, so very unbirdlike.

On the other hand, some birds seemed to take no trouble to conceal their nests at all, and almost to thrust it under notice. The Rook and the Magpie trusted for safety, no doubt, to the loftiness of the trees in which they build when they make their conspicuous nests, but there are many small birds whose nests, though within easy reach of the ground, are almost equally conspicuous.

ARRIVE WEATHER PROPHETS.

He had mentioned the early or late appearance of Wild Geese as being an indication of the severity, or otherwise, of the coming winter, but there were many other birds from whose habits they might get some idea as to what the weather was about to be. The low or lofty flight of the Swallow was so well known as an indication of coming rain or fine weather that he need scarcely mention it, but the Golden Plover was an equally reliable guide, being very restless and noisy before a coming storm.

It was well known to those who dwell by the sea that the wailing and screaming of the Seagull was a sure precursor of bad weather. When they saw the Rooks busy on the grass fields they might feel sure that rain was not long distant, and the Missel Thrush was in some districts called the "Storm-cock" from its habit of pouring out its song from some tall tree before bad weather. Before a thunderstorm they might often see Ducks chasing each other along the water, and making a prodigious splashing.

ELOQUENT PREACHERS.

These were but a few of the signs which birds gave as to the weather, but they were enough to prove that they were very sure and useful weather guides to those who had eyes to note their habits. But it was not only lessons of weather lore that they taught us: they preached to us most eloquently, as they toiled in nest building, of perseverance; they taught us lessons of maternal love in the care of their young, and in the readiness with which many of them would put themselves in danger on their account; they showed us the beauty of quiet, unobtrusive lives, spent in doing that which they were made for; but, above all, and beyond all, they were reminders to us of Him without whose knowledge not a Sparrow falls to the ground — of Him who made and sustains both them and us.

In appreciative terms the Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to the Rev. K. A. Deakin for his interesting lecture. This was seconded by Mr. J. Gross, and supported by Messrs. F. H. Joscelyne and H. Guise, and unanimously passed.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

When Wild Birds are Plentiful.

If an observant bird lover had taken a country ramble in the month of April and had again travelled over the same route in the present month, he would be astonished at the increase in the number of birds. In the former month the winter flocks had broken up, the birds had paired off and were to be seen scattered along the hedgerows and other favourable spots for nesting; some had already commenced domestic affairs, and were consequently unseen, or were possibly unnoticed; although in the spring wild creatures are so full of life and vigour, flitting and fussing about the hedgerows, that one always fancies he sees more individual birds than is actually the case. The early summer months have been cold and cheerless, but it is doubtful if such weather has had much effect upon wild birds. It may possibly have retarded the pairing of some individual couples, but Nature would assert itself, and these would in time carry out their duties, and it is very doubtful if more than the usual number of young birds would lead a bachelor existence during the summer. In every spring, no matter what climatic conditions exist, many breeding hens die from egg binding, and in such a season as this it is, of course, probable that the number has been considerably increased. As regards the young ones I am inclined to think the cold does not make much difference to them, exceping that they do not grow quite so fast nor feather so quickly, for they are very much like young plants, and thrive best in warm, showery weather. On cold spring days, when the east wind is blowing, and there is more than a touch of winter in the air, one may note with pleasure the doings of the old birds engaged in the duties of rearing a nest full of youngsters. The hen bird at such times is much more frequently at the nest, she is apparently engaged best part of the day in brooding the chicks, leaving the task of carrying food to her partner, who, in consequence, works harder than usual. I have seen a hen Blackbird brood a family of almost fully fledged young ones during the major part of a cold day. It is, therefore, doubtful if there has been any diminishing in the number of wild birds reared to a state of maturity, in spite of the bad weather. Now is the time for one to note these things, the early broods have been launched into the world, the migrants are still with us, the flood of bird life is at the full. A road leading to the downs, with hedgerows on either side, is crowded with young Sparrows and Finches, and dozens of fluttering Linnets scramble among the furze upon the common, while here and there a pair of Stonechats try hard to entice one away from the helpless youngsters; the mournful pleading of the Pipit and scolding of the Whitethroats speak plainly of young ones hidden among the thick underwood. The flocks of Rooks have increased enormously, and the huge gatherings of Starlings make one pause and wonder if, in wholesale protection, we are not making a rod for our own back. When in flight one cannot distinguish any difference in these immature birds. They are apparently as large and as fully fledged as the old ones, but when handled one is not enchanted with the youngsters. They have dirty, smoky-looking plumage, entirely lacking in beauty; no spangles, no gloss, no markings; the wing alone show any signs of the feathered glory that is to come.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

The Down of the Eider Duck.

Wild Ducks and Geese line their nests with down plucked from the breast of the sitting birds. This down is a very valuable product, and in many parts the collectors make quite a business of gathering it. In Iceland the down of the famous Eider Duck is taken annually, and it is said that about one-sixth of a pound can be taken from a nest; this is worth about twelve shillings per pound. As everyone knows feathers are very light, and the quantity required for an ordinary coverlet would not be more than a couple of pounds.

Protection of Gulls.

Bird protection has done much for the birds of Great Britain, and many species have increased considerably during the last few years. In addition to our inland birds, many birds of the coast have profited by protection—unfortunately some of these live chiefly upon fish, consequently the fishermen upon the coast look with disfavour upon the protection of some species. Lately there has been a good deal of complaint against the Gulls. These birds will eat almost anything, and naturally do not refuse to have a meal of good fresh fish when procurable. Some of the County Councils contemplate having the protection removed for a period of years, not so much to destroy the adult birds, as to prevent their increase by allowing the eggs to be taken during the breeding season. This appears to be a more humane way of dealing with the subject, than shooting the old birds.

Do Gulls Think?

With reference to Professor Watson's remarks which appeared on this page last week, on the powers of language and thought of Seagulls, Mr. John Laing, of Edinburgh, says they bring to his mind a very interesting sight observed while residing for some time in Yell, Shetland. The gulls there had a very 'cute way of finding their food from the sea. It was an every day occurrence to see them picking up stones in their beaks, and rising about 30 feet or so into the air, let the stone drop, and then dive into the water after it. There was a deal of tangle on the near shore, and fish took shelter beneath this. The Gulls knew this, and disturbed them by letting the stones drop, and when the fish appeared the gulls went for them. This act points to a deal of "knowing" in the Gulls, and reasoning as well as thinking powers. Whether they communicate the fact to others, or only let others copy their actions, I am not prepared to say; but Professor Watson's remarks are suggestive of "thinking" in gulls.

Two Eggs a Day.

It is generally believed it is not possible for a hen to lay more than one egg in a day, but a few observations made with great care by the Professor of Zoology in the University of Maine show that this is not always true. They relate to poultry, but may interest readers. One hen, a white Wyandotte, which especially was suspected of transgressing the trade-union rate of output, twice in two months laid two eggs on one day. It would seem that there is no known biological reason why the maximum daily rate should be one each day, and the ultimate limit of possibility would seem to depend on the ability of the individual hen to assimilate and transform the materials taken as food into the materials of the eggs. There may be difficulties, however, not yet understood that would make it impossible to develop a race of hens which would habitually lay more than one egg a day.

Raven with a "Sweet Tooth."

Speaking of a friend's birds, a writer in a contemporary tells of a pair of Ravens. Their five years of captivity has made no difference to them. Their feathers, if anything, were more intensely blue-black. Though their diet was chiefly raw flesh, an ox head, or a lump of liver, one of them at least did not despise something sweeter at odd times. They were quite different in disposition, those two birds. Of the approach of a stranger the one invariably retired to the highest and most inaccessible corner of the cage, where it roosted, keeping always a jealous eye on the movements of the intruder. The other was more a "man of the world." It danced along a lower perch, and poked its bill through the wire netting which surrounded its cage, as though making friendly advances. When I tried to speak "raven"—and that is a hoarse guttural sound something like "keronk, keronk"—it was graciously pleased to respond deep down in its throat. This more genial raven I discovered had a sweet tooth; it might be more correct to call it a sweet bill. To my surprise one day on my offering it a piece of chocolate it quickly took it into its bill, and pretended to have swallowed it whole. This was only preteuce. In a little while it produced the lump of chocolate, and tapped at it gently with its formidable beak. Finding that it slid away from its approaches, the bird raised the sweetmeat up in its bill, put it under one of its claws, and then dabbed at it contentedly, evidently enjoying the taste of a new form of food.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL. Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

The World's Greatest Bird Specialist.

I DON'T ASK

anyone to purchase a single thing from me unless they have it on trial, and see what they are getting for their money, and for that reason I send everything on approval, either on receipt of cash or "Cage Birds" deposit system, and money is refunded in full if perfect satisfaction not given. Clap nets, made from real flax thread, ¾in. mesh, 3yds. long, 4ft. deep, 4/ pair, 4yds. 5/-; 5yds. 6/-; 6yds. 7/-; 7yds. 8/-; 8yds. 9/-; 9yds. 10/-; 10yds. 11/- per pair, all 4ft. deep, and fitted complete with pure hemp lines, beech stave poles, ash pegs, and all accessories, ready for immediate work; bat folding sparrow nets, fitted on 19ft. bamboo poles, 6/6 pair; self-acting spring net traps, 18in. long, 9d. each; 24in., 1/- each. These traps are by far the largest and best traps on market, will catch and hold uninjured any bird from a Wren to a Rook; can be set anywhere by a child, and cannot get out of order; nearly 2,000 sold last season. Single trap cages 6d. each, 4/6 doz.; double ditto, 10d. and 1/- each; 7/6 and 9/- dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each; 12/- dozen; all have separate compartment for call bird. Patent self-setting and self-acting trap cage, works automatically, 1/6 each; real Japanese Bird Lime, absolutely strongest made, guaranteed to hold birds even in the rain, and only lime to stand all weathers, ½lb. 6d.; ¼lb., 10d.; 1lb., 1/6; sample, 3d.; all post free; loose netting for all kinds bird nets, real Irish Thread, ½in. mesh, 7ft. deep 3d. yd.; 9 ft. deep, 4d. yd.; 12 ft. deep, 5d. yd., post free. This netting must not be confused with the thick American cotton netting now being sold as bird netting; mine is exceedingly fine, but very strong, and will not show on ground. Pure hemp pull lines, 65yds. long, strong as boat lines, 1/4 each post free. Everything required by catchers in stock; please send stamp for full list and sample of netting. Round or square topped call cages, 3d. each; 2/6 doz.; 27/- gross. Linnet or Goldfinch cages, 6d. each, 4/6 doz. Lark runner cages, 3/6, 4/-, and 5/- dozen; singing box cages, 10d., 1/-, and 1/3 each; 8/-, 10/ and 12/- dozen. Cottage topped Thrush or Blackbird cages, 2/6 and 3/- each. Full trade list of sizes, and prices of cages, one stamp. Following received to-day:—"Cross-st., Cheslyn, Hay, Aug. 18th.—Sir,—Please send 4yds. loose netting; it is very cheap; no one would believe how good and strong it is for the money, but I know, as I had some last year, and it is as good as ever it was. —Yours, Charles Perks." "33, Harboro' Park, Rushden.—Sir,—Please send 18yds. netting. The netting I had from you two years ago is as good as ever.—Yours, J. Robinson." "Bright View, Old Rattray, nr. Blairgowrie, Aug. 19th.—Sir,—Please send 1lb. of your bird lime. I got some of your lime last year, and it is the best I ever used for standing all weathers. I caught Crows and Jackdaws on it." Scores of similar letters constantly arriving and open to inspection. All my catching appliances are made by men who are not only practical net makers, but bird catchers as well, and so know from actual experience exactly what is required for the purpose. All leading catchers swear by my nets, and will use no others. I cordially invite comparison with any others on the market, and my prices defy competition. One trial is all I ask, and result will please me.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

LANCET: "This little book will be welcomed by all lovers of birds, whether ornithologists, aviculturists, or the owners of a single pet songster. The author deals with his subject in a thoroughly practical and scientific manner, and the results of his experiments prove the fallacy of some rule-of-thumb theories. . . . The book is well illustrated."

COUNTRY LIFE: ". . . a surprising amount of really valuable advice for all who keep small birds, whether in cages or aviaries. . . . Those who approach the subject with an open mind must admit the cogency of the author's arguments; and these, backed by a very wide experience at first hand, will prove hard nuts to crack for many of the champions of the 'good old methods.' . . . We venture to think that his experience will pave the way for a revolution in the methods of bird keeping in the near future."

Matt. Hopkins, Bird Specialist, 38 and 41, Fylde-st., Preston, Lancashire.

MATTHEWS, LINNET KING.

Gentlemen, I have the finest selection of Linnets in England, also the largest and best-marked birds you can possibly get. Big, fine, healthy Linnets, with nut-brown backs, well pencilled, steady, and well-caged, selected from hundreds at 1/6 each, two for 2/6, a few extra picked specimens, 2/-; make sure winners; also a grand lot with blood-red breast, nut-brown backs, in grand song, 1/6, with singing cage and a packet of special mixed seed, 2/6. If you want to keep your birds in full song and health, try my special mixed wild seed, sold at four packets 1/-, and you will never regret it; call and inspect my British bird buildings, been specially arranged for British birds. Everybody is welcome. State wants for any kind of British you require; all birds carefully packed and sent any distance at my own risk, on seven days' approval, cash or deposit; scores of winners been supplied by me. Gentlemen, read this:—August 16th, 1907, Royeroft Inn, East Aurora, Erie County, America. Sir,—I received Linnets safe, after their long journey, and I must say I am perfectly satisfied, as they started singing the next day. You will hear from me again, as I could not have dealt with a fairer gentleman. Wishing you every success, from Mr. A. Pall, to Matthews, birdcatcher, 44, George-st., Hyde, Cheshire.

THIRTEEN TO THE DOZEN.

All my birds are well on seed before sent out, cock Linnets, 3/- dozen; hens, 1/3 per dozen; mixed aviary birds 2/6 per dozen.—Haslop Bird Stores, Drury Hill, Nottingham.

OWING TO REMOVAL

must clear following; Redstart cock, hand-reared, 5/-; whitethroat, 3/-; Chiffchaff, 3/-; Greenlinch Mules, 3/6; Goldfinch ditto, 6/-; hen Linnet ditto, 3/6; Redpoll, winner, 5/-; Mealy Redpoll, 5/-; Brambiefinch, 4/-; Chaffinch, 4/-; aviary bred Canaries, 7/6 pair; approval; deposit. — Cocks, Eastfield, Peterboro'.

HARRY ALLEN,

Champion of all champions. Gentlemen, If you want to be successful on the show bench, or at singing contests, try one of my birds, and you will never regret it. Win when you like; but without the right stuff you can't. I have given sufficient proof that I keep nothing but the best by winning all before me. I have a fine lot of young cock Linnets, large and very tame; will make sure winners, 1/- each, extra picked birds singing nicely 1/6 each, no rubbish, and every bird guaranteed; grand cock Linnets, singing beautifully, in cage, with a packet of my special mixture and instructions how to feed, 3/- the lot; never before offered to the public by anyone but myself. I also defy any dealer to supply the same for the money. I have a beautiful dark Linnet Mule Norwich type (yellow), very tame, can win in good class, price 10/6, satisfaction guaranteed. This bird will soon make a name for his owner; he has also a few good Linnet notes in him. Four packets of my special mixture 1/-, all Linnet fanciers should try this. Anyone wishing to make their Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, should send P.O. 1/0 for my book, which tells you how to moult, how to train for contests, how to feed, what to do with birds in soft moult, and the cause of no song, and how to make them sing at one another with wings down, a very valuable book. With this book you can make 1/- Linnets into 10/- ones. I will give £25 to anyone who can find a hen Linnet in my place. Every bird in the best of health. Please give me a trial order for proof of the above. Beware of imitations; cash or deposit.—Harry Allen, 42, Brown Hill-cres., Harehills, Leeds.

YOU MAY SAY

"A Bird's a Bird," wherever you buy it. I don't gainsay that, but everyone knows there's a vast amount of difference in birds, and as it costs no more to keep a good one than a waster, it naturally follows that all sensible persons try to get the best. All birds sent out by me are guaranteed exactly as described, and are sent on approval entirely at my own risk, with the distinct understanding that unless purchasers are fully satisfied, they only have to return bird and I refund money in full. Can fairer terms be offered? Splendid large genuine Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and well on seed, 1/6 each, three 4/-, six 6/6 twelve 12s.; specially selected large birds to moult for exhibition or muling, 2/- each, three 5/-, six 8/6, or 16/- dozen; grand large cock brown Linnets, well on seed, and warranted all cocks, 8d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6, twelve 4/-; specially-selected exhibition cocks in song 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4s.; cock Greenfinches, three 1/-, six 1/6; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 2/-; cock Skylarks, in nest feather, 1/- and 1/6 each; hand-reared cock Larks in free song, 3/-, 4/-, and 5/- each; hand-reared Merlin Hawks, finger-tame, 5/- each; cock Goldfinch Mules in splendid song, 4/- and 5/- each; hen Canaries, 1/- and 1/6 each; Cages of every description in stock; dealers please send stamp for wholesale list of cages, it will save pounds. All birds are warranted well caged, properly on hard seed, and have been properly netted in County of Worcester, not the miserable little Irish specimens caught on birdlime. See following: "42, Croft-st., Bonhill, Scotland, August 18th,—Sir, Please send me three Goldfinches. I got one from you last year, and it turned out a champion, and has filled eggs with a Bullfinch hen. Yours, J. Brannan." "4, King Edward-ter., Tanfield Lea, Durham, August 19th.—Sir, Goldfinch arrived safe, and I am well pleased with it. Thanks for prompt attention. Yours, J. Nicholson." "14, Marine-ter., Skinningrobe, August 20th.—Sir, Received six Linnets, and am well pleased with them. I got six from Lancs, and yours were far superior to them. Please send another six. I have just sold one of last lot for 2/3. Yours, C. Hart." Testimonials similar to above arriving by every post. Thousands open to inspection any time. Don't forget everything on approval; cage birds deposit system and money freely refunded if every satisfaction not given. See Appliance column for further advertisement.

A Real Live Question.

IS IT A BIRD YOU WANT?

If so, I will tell you what I am prepared to do. I have a large number of 1907 Birds and the Cocks are not yet in full song, but still I am prepared to guarantee the sex, and should by any chance the Bird not prove to be a Cock I will exchange any time between now and January 1st, 1908.

My Offer means that I will return your cash or send you a satisfactory Bird if the one sent fails to please.

1907 Birds.—Pure prize-bred Yorkshire Cocks, 4/-, 4/6, 5/6, 7/6, and 8/6; Hens, 2/-, 2/6, and 3/6; Pairs (Cock and Hen), 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, and 10/6. Travelling Cages are charged for, 3d. extra.

All Birds sent out for Cocks bear my stamp, which is my guarantee of sex, and all Birds bearing such stamp will be exchanged any time between now and January 1st, 1908. The above terms are an absolute safeguard against the well-known Hen Trick practised by others.

Yorkshire Cocks for the early shows at reasonable prices. All other Birds on my usual approval terms.

For full detailed Bird Price List send postcard, or on receipt of two penny stamps to cover postage, I will send my 108 page Catalogue, full of useful information, and should be in every birdroom.

"Cage Birds," 154, FLEET STREET LONDON, E.C.

In sending us the report of the business done at the last meeting of the Bradford and County British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. MYERS, the hon. sec., writes:—I will thank you if you can devote space for report in extenso, as several of your readers in all parts of the county have asked for copy of rules, and I think your paper is the secretary's best medium for reaching fanciers. Will you also put in a small paragraph inviting all secretaries in Yorkshire to apply for patronage, such applications must reach me not later than September 6th, at 23, Ingleby-place, Bradford.

Our Fanciers' Map

We are now busy preparing our Map of Shows for the season 1907-8, and consequently we advise all those committees who have not fixed their date to do so at once, guarantee to spend at least 25s. with us in advertising the event, when we shall have much pleasure in including their event on our map, which shows at a glance the days when shows are held, and the exact locality. This map goes to every exhibitor of cage birds in the country, free of cost, and is consequently a magnificent advertisement for all shows appearing on it. Over 115 of the leading shows appear at present. Early application is necessary.

THE SHOWS.

ANTWERP.

The 61st annual show was held at Antwerp, Belgium, on August 11th. Entries were confined to young Belgian birds, and the show was patronised by the President of Honour, Mr. James Dewar, from Edinburgh. August is always a difficult moment for these young birds in a show, they are not moulted at all, and only the first nests could be considered to be able to risk a defeat, nevertheless Captain Philp brought his six birds over from Edinburgh to Antwerp very healthy. Thirty-five entries were numbered, which was considered very satisfactory in this bad breeding year. The judges were Messrs. Stynen, De Dekker, and Reinrich.

The President, Mr. Jos. Coenen, opened the show, and regretted the President of Honour could not be present personally, but he was present with them in spirit. The prize of honour went to Mr. Smets, from Ghent, with a Yellow hen, a very good bird in head shape, shoulders and action.

YELLOW COCKS: 1, Jos. Coenen, Antwerp, a very fine bird, with small head, long neck, good colour and square, round on the top of shoulders; 2, Van Der Anwera, Ghent; 3, 4, Smets, Ghent; 5, Captain Philp, Edinburgh. YELLOW HENS: 1, Smets, Ghent; 2, Chs. Janssens, Ghent; 3, Jos. Coenen, Antwerp; 4, Captain Philp, Edinburgh; 5, BUFF COCKS: 1, Jos. Coenen, Antwerp; 2, Smets, Ghent; 3, Captain Philp, Edinburgh; 4, Chs. Janssens, Ghent; 5, Van Der Anwera, Ghent. BUFF HENS: 1, Smets, Ghent; 2, Jos. Coenen, Antwerp; 3, Jos. Coenen, Antwerp; 4, Chs. Janssens, Ghent; 5, Van Der Anwera, Ghent.—B. PELEMAN (hon. sec.).

RADSTOCK.

The Radstock and District Horticultural and Fanciers' Association's twelfth annual show was held on Wednesday, August 21st, and was favoured with splendid weather. Unfortunately most of the open classes in cage birds were cancelled through want of entries, through no doubt not advertising the show in CAGE BIRDS, and not getting a licence from the C.B.U. The exhibits were staged in a part of the tent by themselves, and made a very attractive display. The Hon. Sec., Mr. Clark, was most obliging, and, with his hard-working Committee, is to be congratulated upon the success which met the untiring efforts put forth. Mr. W. G. Bull judged, and his awards gave general satisfaction.

YORKSHIRE: No first award; 2, Lane, Yellow ticked right thigh, long and racy, good head, nice thigh and leg; 3, Pitman, clear Buff, good length and wings, beaten in quality; 4, Lane, hardly so long, good quality, rather thin in neck; vhc, Martin; hc, Tavinor; c, Lane. MULE OR HYBRID: 2, Cains, the Knowle, etc. winner, Yellow variegated Goldfinch mule, grand condition for time of year, wins; 3, Duckett, dark buff Goldfinch mule, nice condition, needs a bit more size and colour; 4, Cray, another variegated Goldfinch mule, out of condition; vhc, Beal, quite a baby. MEMBERS' YORKS, YELL.: 1, Horler, grand quality, nice length, good wings and tail; 2, Woodland, hardly so slim, or such good condition, nice wings and tail; 3, Wareham, long raking bird, nice feather, crosses wings a trifle; 4, Beal, good position, looses head and neck; vhc, Wareham; he, Duckett. YORKS. BUFF: 1, Woodland, nice quality, rare head and neck, good stand; 2, Horler, just loses on condition, bare wing butts; 3, Woodland, another long racy bird, well up on leg; 4, Wareham, fails condition to-day; vhc, Beal; hc, Martin; c, Horler. YORKS. BRED, 1907: 1, Horler, thigh-ticked Buff, grand quality, shows plenty of leg and thigh, a topper, should be heard of again; 2, Woodland, saddle-marked Yellow, nice length and feather, hardly so smart as first; 3, Horler, another good quality Buff, grand wing carriage, as straight as a dart, close up; 4, Horler, Buff, extra long, rather stout, shorter on leg; vhc, J. Horler; hc, Beal; c, Wareham. A grand class. A.O.V. BRED, 1907: 2, Wareham, good Buff Norwich Plainhead, well over perch, nice head and neck; 3, Chivers, grizzle crest, good centre and droop; 4, Chivers, dark crest, not so large; vhc, Chivers; hc, Wareham. A.O.V., ANY AGE: 1, Chivers, beautiful Yellow crestbred, wonderful length of feather; 2, Wareham, buff Norwich, on the small side, but grand type and quality, short in wings and tail; 3, Wareham, longer, and not so good in type; 4, Chivers, Crestbred, good skull, fails in condition owing to being bad in moult; vhc, Wareham; hc, Chalker; c, Worgir. BRITISH A.V.: 2, Chalker, Greenfinch, nice colour, good size and condition, well staged, a Buff; 3, Ashman, a really good Goldfinch, only in the moult, nice shaped blaze; 4, Gulliford, a nice coloured Linnet, good condition; vhc, Chivers; hc, Chalker.

BRAMPTON (Cumberland).

On the 22nd of August, the Brampton and District Floral and Horticultural Society held their annual show in the Temperance Hall, which, being large and comfortable, is well adapted for an exhibition. This year the management included in their catalogue seven classes for cage birds. The bird section was a wonderful little show, considering the season. The entries were not so large in some of the classes as might have been, still, the competition was keen. The show was well patronised, and much interest was taken in the bird section, which gives encouragement to the management to include more classes next year. The obliging secretary, Mr. C. T. Mitchelson, was ably assisted by a committee who worked for all they were wirth to make the show a success. The Carlisle veteran, Mr. Hugh Connerton, placed the cards.

BORDER FANCY, LOCAL, YELLOW OR BUFF COCK: 1 and spl, Laidler; 2, Warwick; 3, Thompson. YELLOW OR BUFF HEN: 1 and spl, Laidler; 2, Little, Cowran Bridge; 3, Warwick; 4, Pattinson. GREEN OR VARIEGATED COCK OR HEN: 1 and spl, Laidler; 2, Lancaster; 3, Stephenson; 4, Dufton. BRITISH HARDBILL, OPEN: 1, 2, and spl, Robson; 3, Blake. NORWICH, YELLOW OR BUFF, OPEN: 1, 2, and spl, Bunting, Carlisle; 3, Blake. BORDER FANCY, YELLOW OR BUFF HEN, OPEN: 1 and spl, Bunting; 2, 3, Blake. YELLOW OR BUFF COCK: 1 and spl, Robson; 2, Bunting; 3, Ellwood. SPECIAL given by the Society for best bird in show, J. J. Robson.

EAST BOWLING.

This Society held their third first feather show for Canaries at the Barley Mow Hotel, East Bowling on August 24th. The entry was very good, and some excellent young birds were staged. Mr. T. Bennett, of Great Horton, officiated as judge, and his awards were as follows:—YORKS. CLEAR YELLOW: 1, Bottomley; 2, Thompson; 3, Varley; 4, Palframan; vhc, Hudson; he, Varley; c, Firth. CLEAR BUFF: 1, Casey; 2, and 3, Bywater; 4, Thompson; vhc, Varley; hc, Firth; c, Bottomley. TICKED YELLOW: 1, Clark; 2, Thompson; 3 and 4, W. Bleazard; vhc, Bottomley. TICKED BUFF: 1 and 4, Hudson; 2, Bottomley; 3, Clark; vhc, W. Bleazard; hc, Clark; c, Casey. SELLING: 1, Clark; 2, Casey; 3, W. Bleazard; 4, Firth; vhc, Hudson.

KINGSWOOD (Bristol).

The annual show of the Kingswood and St. George's Fanciers' Association, which was held on August 21st, proved very successful. Entries were well up to the average, but had it not been for the much-to-be-regretted breakdown at the printers of CAGE BIRDS, they would in all probability have far exceeded past years. As it was, the fanciers in the South, South-West, and West, did not receive their copies in time to avail themselves of the generous offer of the Editor to enter for the special which he offered under unique conditions. The quality right through was very good, and several promising youngsters were on view. Mr. S. Hill proved himself a very able and obliging secretary, and was well supported by a good committee. The attendance was splendid, and the show was in every respect a most marked success. Mr. W. H. Manley judged. NORWICH (7): 1, 2, Taylor, winner beautiful quality ticked yellow, nice head, good-shaped body, clean cut, 2nd nice colour, good size and shape, capital wings, rare head and neck, but a little out of form to-day; 3, Stone, prettily-marked buff, nice shape, good head, neck, and chest, nice condition; vhc, Tristem; hc, c, Stone. YORKSHIRE (7): 1, 3, Andrews and Biss, good, lengthy buff, full of quality and style, splendid shape, capital colour, very fine in feather; 2, Lovell, plenty of style, body nicely tapered away, little frilly-chested, but a good Yorkie all round, 3rd, a rattling good bird, very shapely, nice feather, but not shown at his best; vhc, Barry, another very stylish specimen; also hc, and c, Barry. A.O.V. (2): 3, Tristem, dark crest, of nice size, but a trifle split in crest, very neat feathers of nice texture; hc, Winstone. GOLDFINCH OR BULLFINCH (3): 2, Lovell, a good coloured Bullfinch, nice cap and bars, good size and shape; 3, Bull, a first-class Goldfinch, good, square-cut blaze, nice collar, capital wings, in good condition. LINNET, SISKIN, OR REDPOLL (6): 1, Howe, good, nutty-brown Linnet, nice head, good size and markings, wins; 2, 3, Bull, a Redpoll and Linnet, little to choose between them for 2nd place, the Redpoll about the best we have seen out for some time, and Linnet runs winner very close indeed; vhc, Pool. BRITISH BIRD, LARGE (3): 2, Howe, Hoopoe, very smart exhibit, well-staged; 3, Bond Bros., a Cornish Chough, in good feather, staged in a very smart cage, cage alone deserved the card; vhc, Chapman. BRITISH SMALL (4): 1, Howe, a Nightingale, the best 'gale seen out for some considerable time; 2, Bull, a Tree Pipit, lovely colour, good breast and very tame; 3, Rowens, Crossbill, fair colour and bill. FOREIGN: 1, Howe; 3, Davies; vhc, Leavers; hc, Hale; c, Jay. MEMBERS, YORKSHIRE: 2, 3, Morgan, buff and yellow, a couple of smart birds; hc, Winstone, equally as good, though not so well staged. A.O.V. (6): 2, Taylor, good Bullfinch type Norwich, hardly ready; 3: Stone, Norwich Dartshead and neck to winner. BRITISH BIRD, only one exhibitor, 3, Stone, with a fair Bullfinch.

LARKHALL (Bath).

Under the auspices of the Larkhall Men and Women's Adult School, a very successful Flower, etc., Show was held at the Victoria Hall, Aug. 22nd. The show was opened at 3 o'clock by the Rev. J. de Guerin, M.A., who was highly pleased with the exhibits, and congratulated the members and the exhibitors on such an excellent array of exhibits. He hoped the same would be successful and become an annual event. In the evening several very kind friends contributed to a very excellent concert, which was appreciated. The rooms were completely packed, and this should prove a financial success, and encourage breeders of cage birds. A few classes were provided and brought together a very nice collection of about 30 birds. These were judged by Mr. T. F. Andrews, who made a successful début; we were sorry to find that only 1st and 2nd cards were given, as there were several birds worthy of high honours. The committee are new to this kind of thing, so another year we hope to see more honours given. The arrangements were capitally carried out and reflected credit upon the committee, while the hon. sec., Mr. A. Sealy, was most obliging and courteous. CANARY OR MULE: 1, Taylor, buff Norwich, a very fair bird; 2, Swift, ticked head Norwich, fair type and head. We much preferred No. 22a, same owner, a good shaped buff Norwich hen, nicely done, good chest, short and cobby in flights and tail. BRIT.: 1, Russell, Goldfinch, fair blaze and tannings; 2, F. L. Langley, very nice Siskin; we noticed a nice Bullie in this class, good colour, nice cap and bib, in moult. FOREIGN BIRDS, an interesting class, one Parrot being very much admired for its good talking; 1, Mrs. Rhynies, blue-fronted Amazon in good trim; 2, A. G. Hobbs, capital marked Malabar, beautiful neck ring, a grand talker. We heard this bird was reared from the nest in India and brought to England by its owner.

GAERWEN (Anglesey).

The Gaerwen Society held a successful Fur and Feather Show on August 17th; thirty-six birds were staged, which is very good, considering the time of the year, and great credit is due to the secretary, Mr. John Thomas, and the committee for the success which they achieved. Mr. E. D. Owen judged.

YORKSHIRE (12): 1, spl., c, W. H. Williams, 1st fine upstanding yellow, good quality, nice stand, fine wings and tail; 2, res., Evans, 2nd yellow, good colour, grand slim bird, fails slightly in quality; res., grand slim buff, but rather feathery on thighs; 3, E. F. Jones, buff larger, not so good in position, but nice quality; vhc and he, R. E. Griffith, vhc, nice slim bird, but in moult. NORWICH (4): 1, spl., 2, E. J. Jones; 1st even-marked dark crest, well radiated and veiny, nice size and quality, well shown; 2nd big romping buff Norwich, grand type, colour, and quality; 3, res., Gwilym-Jones, 3rd variegated dark crest of good size, and plenty of body feather, res., yellow Norwich in moult. MULES (6): 1, and two spls., O. Brothers, large dark buff Goldfinch-Canary, nice shapely bird, in lovely condition; 2, Thomas, variegated buff, good size and shape, fails condition. 3. E. J. Jones, dark yellow, rich blaze, good colour, but lost in condition; res. T. Williams, vhc, W. H. Williams, he, W. Williams. GOLDFINCH (9): 1, spl., 2, O. Brothers, both rich square blazes, nice bars and buttons, the 2nd hardly so good in wings as winner; 3, Ford, another good Finch, with nice rich body colour, bit down in condition; res., G. Jones. BRITISH A.V.: (5): 1. O. Brothers, Greenfinch, nice size and shape, full of colour; a good one; 2, Miss E. V. Jones, Bullfinch, nice size and shape, beautiful cap, nice even colour; 3, E. F. Jones, Missel-thrush in good order; res., Forbes, Bullfinch, nice size, shape and colour, but starting to moult; vhc, Roberts, Greenfinch.

CANARY BREEDING COMPETITION.

A large number of entries has been made in this competition. All of them will be carefully gone through, and the result announced as soon as possible.

DURBAN (South Africa).

This show was held in connection with the show of the Durban and Coast Poultry Club, on July 18th, and 19th. Hitherto the cage birds at Durban have been part of the Poultry Club's Show, but on this occasion, although shown in the same building, they were a distinct show in themselves, the venture being the first show of the Durban and Coast Cage Bird Club. They were a most attractive collection, and although the entry, 87, was not so good as had been expected, it was nevertheless considered satisfactory, and although numbers were not great, the quality was splendid. The chief feature of the show was undoubtedly the Yorkshire section. A finer lot of Yorkshires has never been seen in South Africa. Mr. Duke's team were specially good, and Mr. Parker also benched some most typical specimens. Norwich were not over good. It is really very surprising that these handsome birds do not catch on in the Colony. Crests and Crest-breds were hardly up to those seen at 'Maritzburg. Mules and British were only moderate, but Natal and Cape birds came up fairly well in numbers, and contained some very nice specimens. Parrots were a capital lot, and were greatly admired. Mr. F. Field had a very easy task in securing the Norwich Plainhead Cup.

NORWICH IMPORTED or COLONIAL-BRED, YELLOW: 6, 1, hc., Field; 2, Dinkelman; 3, vhc, Sullivan. BUFF: 3, 1, vhc, Field; hc, Elliott. COLONIAL BRED BUFF: (4): 1, 2, 3, Field. TICKED, ETC., IMPORTED, or COLONIAL BRED (4): 1, 2, Duke; vhc, Field; c, Dawson. TICKED, ETC., COLONIAL-BRED (3): 1, 2, 3, Field. CREST, IMPORTED or COLONIAL-BRED (7): 1, 3, spl and spl for best Colonial-bred Crest, Field; 2, Wilson; vhc, hc, Sullivan. CRESTBRED, IMPORTED or COLONIAL-BRED (4): 1, 2, Field; vhc, Dawson. YORKS, YELLOW, IMPORTED or COLONIAL-BRED (7): 1, 2, 3, vhc, Duke; hc, Dinkelman. BUFF (4): 1, 2, Duke; 3, Parker. Buff, COLONIAL-BRED (3): 1, 3, spl best Yorkshire, and spl for best bird in the show, Duke; 2, Parker. TICKED, ETC., YELLOW, IMPORTED or COLONIAL (5): 1, 2, 3, hc, Duke; vhc, Field. BUFF (3): 1, 2, Duke; vhc, Sullivan. BUFF, COLONIAL-BRED (4): 1, 2, Duke; vhc, Parker. LANCASHIRE, IMPORTED or COLONIAL-BRED (3): 2, Marschs. BREEDING PAIRS (4): 1, 2, spl, Parker; 3, Duke. BRITISH (3): 1, spl, Elliott; 2, Parker. NATAL NATIVE BIRDS (8): 1, 2, 3, Kettle. These were Blue Finches, Rice Bird, and Red-Headed Finches in the order given. A.O.V. CANARY (4): 1, 2, 3, Duke, these were Cinnamon, which in England would have had to compete as Yorkshires. PARROTS, ETC. (5): 1, 2, Chapman; 3, Royston.

Notes on Hybrid Breeding.

Its Possibilities and Opportunities.

By ARGYLE.

Authenticated information is of necessity circumscribed, and as this article treats only of what I can vouch for, my remarks will only cover a limited area. So far as my knowledge goes, the yield of Hybrids has been unusually small. Goldic-Bullfinch Hybrids have done best; three are reported to have been bred in Edinburgh and two in Stirling. One is half-brother to Mr. Williams' (Liverpool) famous exhibit, and is spoken of as a specimen of rare merit, being large and handsome, but it is not possible to determine the sex. The mother is a fresh Bullfinch and is a beauty.

ONLY TWO GREENIES.

I have only heard of two Greenfinch Hybrids, and do not know of a single Redpoll-Bullfinch. Fr. Whiteford, of Hamilton, who is never defeated in obtaining some kind of Hybrid, has three fine Hybrids from a Siberian Goldfinch cock, and a big Greenfinch hen; this cross is a very attractive bird. The weather has had a great deal to do with the failure of the season's breeding in this department of Hybrids, but that is not entirely responsible, and it may be helpful for the future to put on record practical impressions.

FOR AND AGAINST.

Selection of stock has more to do with success or non-success than is generally admitted. In choosing wild birds, the purchaser has to take what he can get. Bullfinch hens could scarcely be got in the spring for any money, and the old-fashioned idea that fresh hens do best seemed to prevail. The great majority of the hens I came across were young and did not nest. My own experience is that Bullfinch hens do far better the second year; they nest earlier, and being sturdier, fertile eggs are obtained. Fanciers who have not been successful with young hens should not lose heart, but should moult the hens carefully and see what next year will do. There are great possibilities in Hybrid breeding, and it is but in its infancy. The breeding throughout the various sections has been backward, and the most difficult crosses are bound to have suffered corresponding with the difficulties attending the crossing of wild birds.

A HARDY LOT.

Greenfinches are a hardy lot, and there is no difficulty in keeping them in excellent condition, and they are free breeders. In my opinion the Greenfinch can be utilised to a greater extent than he is, both as a breeder and foster parent. Greenfinches are capital feeders. Goldfinches are not so hardy, and the mortality among Goldfinches was phenomenal, and consequently this most useful of all wild birds has not been quite a success this year. Goldfinches had not the ordinary vitality, and the crop of Goldfinch Hybrids and Mules will be somewhat short. Siberians have the preference, chiefly on account of size, but it is questionable whether there would not be about equal outcome with a British Goldfinch. The principal quality derived in crossing with the Goldfinch is colour, and that can be obtained from either. The Goldfinch can be mated with the Bullfinch, Greenfinch Redpoll, and Siskin, all of which crosses will produce lovely Hybrids. He has been fairly successful in the capacity of a Hybrid breeder in 1907, but greater success was expected.

A FREE MATER.

The Redpoll mates most freely with the Bullfinch hen, and raises the hopes of the owner, but the general outcome is clear eggs. The lesser Redpoll is preferred, but I am inclined to think that the greater Redpoll would be more likely. The common experience is that it is well-nigh impossible to get a Redpoll-Bullfinch Hybrid, but rarity and the fact that the cross has been produced is a strong incentive to persevere with the effort to secure a Hybrid. For a Redpoll a small Bullfinch hen is preferable.

A ONE TIME FAVOURITE.

The Linnet Hybrid in its various forms is very common, and quite a number appeared in former years, but the Greenfinch and Goldfinch Hybrids get the preference on the show bench, and breeders of Linnet Hybrids have become discouraged. The Linnet-Bullfinch Hybrid now, however, should have his opportunity. He is a good all-round Hybrid, and this year's experience may lead to attention being given to him. I have never come across a Siskin-Bullfinch Hybrid, but it has occurred to me that it would be worth trying; it would be out of the ordinary run, and form an attractive addition to the show bench.

A POPULAR BEAUTY.

The Goldfinch-Greenfinch Hybrid is a beauty, and would be very popular were show-committees providing a class for this cross. At the present time he has to compete with other Hybrids, which puts his chance of winning first prize very remote. A Gold-finch-Redpoll is a most charming Hybrid; indeed, it is open to question if in all the range of cage birds anything can equal a Goldfinch-Redpoll Hybrid for a drawing-room pet. He is so tiny and dainty that he is easily kept in the pink of condition, the parentage of both birds comes out very strongly, and the Hybrid has all the attractiveness of the lively engaging Redpoll.

AN ENDLESS RANGE.

The possibilities for Hybrid breeding are endless, and could be extended if those who have wealth would encourage breeders by giving fair prices for rare specimens. Hybrids are engaging companions and only require to be known to be appreciated. Very little is known by the ordinary member of the community of the ornithological world, he or she goes to a bird dealer and purchases an ordinary bird, which in many cases does not give satisfaction; it is preferable to deal with a bona-fide breeder; I do not mean the man who breeds a few birds and at the same time buys and sells as he has opportunity.

EMIGRATION OF SWIFTS.

SIR,—The night of Thursday, August 23rd, may be noted as the time of emigration of the Swifts from these parts. On that day the sky was fairly sprinkled with them in every direction, but on the following day not one was to be seen. Chimney Swallows, House Martins, and Sand Martins have not yet finished rearing their broods.

COAL TAR AS A CURE FOR ASTHMA IN CAGE BIRDS.

SIR,—As there seems some misconception over the coal tar remedy for asthma, I could inform your readers there is nothing novel in this. It has long been in use by the old Yorkshire fanciers, and was given me some two years ago, and since then I have had occasion to purchase different quantities from time to time, and have always been able to procure it. The name is "Alcoholic Solution of Coal Tar"; dose, four drops, at first, to six in drinker. Care should be taken in measuring it out, as it is a very powerful poison. It is a very good cure for all kinds of colds in cage birds. I simply give this information, as your readers seem on the wrong tack, and I do not think Wright's Coal Tar would be much use for the purpose.

BRAMBLE-CHAFFINCH HYBRID.

A Killwinning Breeder's Success.

SIR,—Having heard that Mr. Sam Faddies, of Kilwinning, had been successful in rearing a splendid specimen of the Bramblefinch Chaffinch Hybrid, I took a walk over there on Sunday last to judge for myself, and I was amply rewarded for my walk by the splendid bird I saw. I have no doubt of the parentage, as traces of both birds are distinctly seen in the Hybrid. It is a cock bird, showing the Bramblefinch wing to perfection, while the head and breast showed unmistakable signs of the Chaffinch. Mr. Faddies had some Canaries, and pairs for muling, all caged off inside his house, but he gave the Bramble and his hen the whole outside aviary to themselves, with the use of the inside house too. The Chaffinch built a fine nest up in the corner of the inside house, and laid four eggs, all of which fertilised, but he only managed to rear one. The Chaffinch reared the youngster herself. Mr. Faddies, whom I found an ardent reader of CAGE BIRDS, and a genuine fancier, will only be too pleased to show the bird to any fancier desirous of passing his opinion on it. His address is Garden-square, Main-street, Kilwinning, Ayrshire. Trusting the above may be of some interest to your numerous readers.

GEORGE RAESIDE.

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUBS.

International Triangular Contest.

SIR,—I wish to protest against Mr. Matthes' misleading statement re contest. Half a truth is sometimes worse than a lie. He says the Scottish Club wished the contest two years running in Scotland. No, sir, we wanted no such things. To put the matter plain, we wanted the contest to be as formerly, one year in Scotland and the following year in England. The Southern Club wished the contest two years in England to one in Scotland; to this our committee could not agree. As an international contest between England and Scotland, it must be he'd every alternate year in Scotland and England. The mere fact of the Southern Club wishing to come into the contest made no difference, except that it would have made the contest more interesting. Our committee left the two English clubs to choose their ground when the contest was due in England. What does Mr. Matthes want? We don't wish their club to send two years running to Scotland, nor do we wish to send two years running to England. It does seem like as he wished to kill the contest. That is what it means if we are to send two years running to England, as the second year would be a failure. He seems to think the Southern Club would be the only one which would be put to expense. I would just remind him that they have much better travelling facilities in England than we have in Scotland, and he may be surprised to learn that we have great difficulties in getting birds even to Edinburgh during the show season from some of our members, owing to want of connections and long distances from stations. Our committee desire nothing but harmony with the English Plainhead Clubs, and we are prepared to come to reasonable arrangements with our friends in all matters which go for the improvement of the Norwich Canary, but we are not going to sit down, fold our arms, and let even Mr. Matthes make any statement he chooses against the Scottish Club.

ALBINO MEADOW PIPIT.

SIR,—I notice, in reply to a correspondent ("E.T."), Mr. Weston asks if anyone had seen a white Meadow Pipit before. I had one some years since, a pure Albino, with pink eyes, which was reared from the nest in Cambridgeshire, and which I bought in nestling plumage and moulted. I showed it at Bedford Show, where it took a special. I sent it to Norwich Show, where it died during the show. S. H. MAYS.

CLUB REPORTS.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

Meeting held August 20th. It was decided to adopt the resolution of the Y.C.C., which has reference to each Yorkshire specialist club recognising the others suspensions. The cup competition for best young bird bred by a member was decided to be held at Wallsend, where Mr. Mundell judges. The points special and medals were allotted to Newcastle, South Shields, Blaydon, and Gateshead. Prize money of first-feather show was paid to those members attending, with others please apply to me for theirs. T. C. CRAWDALL, hon. sec.

BRADFORD COUNTY B.B.M.C.

Meeting held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, on August 24th. The President (Mr. W. A. Cowgill) in the chair. The following were elected members: Mr. F. Gelder (Little Norton), Mr. Muckwell (Keighley), Mr. E. Mason (Windhill), Mr. J. Thomas (Otley). The meeting also elected Mr. Thomas (Otley), on the Committee in place of Mr. Dawson (Otley), who wrote stating his inability to accept office. It was passed that the sum of five pounds (£5) be given for specials, half to the champion and half to the novice section. A few gentlemen present contributed liberally to this "special" fund, and we already have in hand or promised a quarter of the sum without encroaching on members' subscriptions. We had also several promises of special prizes in kind. Will secretaries note that the committee will sit on Saturday, September 7th at 8 p.m. to allocate the shows at which the specials are to be competed for. Any show in Yorkshire is qualified which is prepared to make at least the following classes for the club's patronage, viz., one for Hardbills, one for Insectivorous, and one for Mule or Hybrid. Kindly send in your applications. The business then was the making of rules to govern the club, and the following were adopted:

1. That this club be called the Bradford and County British Bird and Mule Club, its objects being to promote the proper keeping, breeding, and rearing of British birds, Mules and Hybrids.

2. The headquarters of the society shall be the Market Tavern Hotel, Godwin Street, Bradford, Yorkshire; quarterly general meetings to be held when necessary, and due notice to be given in CAGE BIRDS by the secretary.

3. The officers of the society shall consist of a President, two vice-presidents, elected from members inside the Bradford district, and two vice-presidents elected from members residing outside the Bradford district, eighteen members of the committee, six residing in the Bradford district and twelve outside.

4. The definition of Bradford district to be six miles' radius from Bradford Town Hall.

5. The committee for the time being shall have power to fill up from time to time during any current year vacancies occurring in their number.

6. Members of this club shall agree to give all protection possible to the various wild birds, compatibly, of course, with their position of fanciers of the respective varieties of British Birds proper.

7. The annual general meeting to be held on the last Saturday in February, when the secretary shall present the balance sheet for the current year, and rules shall be revised, if necessary, and officers elected for the ensuing year.

8. Special prizes shall be offered from time to time at various shows, and such prizes shall be allotted at a general meeting convened for that purpose.

9. Shows, to obtain the club's patronage, must have not less than three classes devoted exclusively to British Birds, Mules, or Hybrids, viz., one class for Hardbills, any variety, one class for Insectivorous, and one class for Mules or Hybrids. Birds of prey to be excepted.

10. That the club's specials to be offered for competition only at open shows, and no members shall be eligible to compete for same who has not previously paid his or her annual subscription of 1/- to the secretary for the current year.

11. That the club's specials be not offered at any shows unless the word British be inserted in schedule thus: Bullfinch (British), Goldfinch (British).

12. Points to count for all club's specials, as number in class, seven the highest number. Should a tie take place the number taking most prize money to win the special. Points issued in other societies' schedules or catalogues not recognised by this club.

13. Secretaries of shows obtaining the club's patronage to forward a marked catalogue containing the awards directly such awards are given.

14. When two or more members join or amalgamate interests for the purpose of exhibiting, such amalgamation shall be termed a partnership. Where such partnership exists, the same must be recognised as such with the secretary of the B.C.B.B. and M. Club, who must be satisfied that such partnership is bona fide, and registered before September 1st in each year.

15. Most points at allotted shows to count for specials, and no member to take a prize unless he has shown at two or more under the club's patronage.

16. That the club recognises as a novice one who has not won a first prize in open competition with British Birds, Mules, or Hybrids. He or she to continue their novice status until the close of the current show season.

17. That no member be allowed to compete as a novice who resides under the same roof as a champion.

18. Any member who is proved to the satisfaction of the Committee of the B. and C.B.B. Mule Club to have been guilty of fraudulent, discreditable, or disorderly conduct in regard to a bird, or at any bird show, shall in addition to any pecuniary penalty to which he may be liable, be suspended from judging, competing, winning a prize or special or taking any part at a show held under the auspices of, or where the B. and C.B.B. and M. Club lends its patronage, for such a time as the committee may determine.

19. Any matter arising not herein provided for shall be dealt with by the committee, or by a special general meeting, convened by requisition, signed by at least seven members of the society.

20. That no resolution passed by a general meeting be rescinded unless one month's notice of proposition to rescind same has been given, and such notice has been published in the Fancy Press.

W. R. MYERS,
23, Ingleby Place, Bradford. Hon. Sec.

PLUMSTEAD, WOOLWICH, AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The first monthly meeting was held at the headquarters, Trinity Schools, on August 15th, when a number of rules put forward by the secretaries were reviewed, amended, and passed. It was decided to hold an annual show, and if possible to secure Mr. Robson to judge the same, the date to be decided later. Mr. Roberts was elected an honorary member, and Mr. G. W. Shuants a member. A discussion of the birds brought by members was opened by Mr. Hazell, and taken up by one or two other members. A very pleasant evening came to an end, all too soon.—W. PAWLEY, hon. sec., 13, Olven Road, Plumstead.

HASTINGS & ST. LEONARD'S C.B.S.

A meeting of the Hastings and St. Leonards Cage Bird Society was held at the Royal Oak Hotel on Thursday evening, August 15th. Mr. H. Godden presided over a small attendance. Mr. J. Stevens, who is an expert in bird breeding, and who has lectured before the Society on various occasions, read an interesting paper dealing with birds and the wild seeds to feed them on. Birds kept in confinement should have very large cages and plenty of food and water, so that they could keep themselves clean. Freshly-caught birds which turned sulky and did not eat should be liberated. Preparations for feeding birds were detailed by Mr. Stevens. The birds dealt with were the Goldfinch, Linnet, Chaffinch, Bullfinch, Greenfinch, Bramblefinch, Hawfinch, Reed Bunting, Snow Bunting, Blackbird, Song Thrush, Missel Thrush or Storm Cock, Field Fare or Felt, Redwing, Starling, Skylark, Shore Lark, Wheatear, Pied, Grey and Yellow Wagtail, Nightingale, Black Cap, Redstart, Whinchat, Stonechat, Twite, Siskin, Redpoll and Yellowhammer. He pointed out how these birds could be told by their plumage, showing some beautiful illustrations painted by himself, how they built their nests, number of eggs laid, and how to feed. He then dealt with the wild plants from which the seeds could be obtained for feeding birds, which proved to be interesting. The places where the seeds grew, the colour of the flowers and use of the berries and seeds were also mentioned. Seeds taken from plants saved the corn bill and a breeder of a number of birds found it added to his profits. Several plants were shown by Mr. Stevens. A vote of thanks was passed to the lecturer.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

The Golden-Crested Regulus.

This is not merely the smallest, but one of the most beautiful of British birds, and yet, though abounding in most places, its active and restless habits and the silence of its movements lead to its being but little noticed. The oak, the yew, and the various species of the fir and pine are the usual haunts of this bird. In these tall trees it builds its nest, not only neatly but elegantly, the shape varying according to the situation in which it is placed. It is generally like that of the Chaffinch, open on the top, but sometimes the nests are opened on one side. The eggs, small, round, and cream-coloured, are nine or ten in number. The golden-crested Wren is not a shy bird, and often visits gardens and even suburbs of large towns, and often builds close to a house. It will visit the plants trained round windows. This bird remains with us all the year round, and is often seen in winter among grass or dead leaves searching for insects. The plumage is a beautiful mixture of green and yellow, with white bars on its wings; and on its head is the golden crest, bordered with black, from which it takes its name. Its breeding quarters are generally in the Orkney and Shetland Isles, and other parts.—W. PERRIN, 14 Charles-street, Barnstaple (aged 10 years).

*A Strange Death.

While walking up the River Amber, in Derbyshire, I saw a Kingfisher sitting on the branch of a tree intently watching something in the water. Presently it dived into the water and returned to the perch with something in its beak, and I saw it had caught a large "Bullhead" (fish), which it was vainly trying to swallow. It tried to fly away, but fell into the river. I ran and got it out of the water, but it was too late; the Bullhead was halfway down its throat and it could neither swallow it or disgorge it, and it accordingly died. I had it stuffed with the fish in its mouth, and have it in my collection. Sent by F. C. NODDER (aged 13½), Ribs Castle, Matlock.

*A Bold Starling.

One morning I heard a vase crashing to the floor in our drawing-room. At first I was startled, but after a time I went to the door and listened, and heard another noise. Then I cautiously opened the door, and at first I could see nothing except a smashed vase, then, to my surprise, I saw a starling perched on the gas bracket. Then our dog came rushing in, having heard the noise, and he seemed as surprised as I was, until he caught sight of the bird. After a time I managed to catch it, and I kept it, and it is now enjoying itself in a fine large cage.—Sent by W. GURNEY (aged 13), 224, Plumstead Common-road, Plumstead, Kent.

SINGING CONTESTS.

Specially Interesting and Beautifully Produced.

Norwich Record Bird Breeding Association will hold their next annual show on October 14th.

I am glad to say I sold all Mules I advertised in CAGE BIRDS last week :—W. EVANS (Reading).

S. OUSLEY writes :—I had fourteen replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS of four-pointed Mules.

Your last Special Number is a treat; it is a pleasure to read it through.—J. J. PENALUNA (Blackwood).

Mr. T. J. Ambrose will judge cage birds at the North Berks. F.C. Show, to be held at Abingdon on November 7th.

Mr. A. Lupton, the hon. sec. of the Bermondsey and District Fanciers Society, has removed to 76, Camborne-road, Southfields, S.W.

I have removed from 213, Heavy Gate-road to 41, Rochley-road, Hillsborough, Sheffield.—JOHN MILNE.

Will the fancier who borrowed a double-carrying box from Mr. J. Brycebank (Greenock) last February, kindly return it to him at once?

The judges for the show of the Watford C.B.S. on November 8th and 9th, are Messrs. J. H. Roe and J. Frostick, writes Mr. A. J. WATTS, the hon sec.

Great interest is being shown in the question, "Who will judge the Greens at the Crystal Palace Show this year?" Up to the present echo answers "Who?"

Mr. John S. Crawford (Glasgow), well known amongst local naturalists, expects to be away from home for some considerable time. His address will be uncertain.

Mr. J. W. Ramsden has cleared out all his high-class stock of Cinnamon Norwich to Mr. J. Dobson, of Cinnamon fame. A high figure was asked and readily given.

Owing to clashing with another fixture, the Morecambe Cage Bird Show date has been altered from October 30th to November 6th, so writes Mr. J. H. IRELAND, the secretary.

Mr. Jas. Ramsay, bird specialist, late of Kinnairds, Arbreath, has removed to 71, Dover-street, Anderston, Glasgow, to which address all future communications should be sent.

A. S. TREASURE (Cheltenham) writes:—Some of the specialist clubs are very slow in allotting their patronage. I am glad to say we have the patronage of the British Roller Canary Club.

Mr. GORDON (Sunderland Show) writes:—I believe we are going to have a heavy show on November 22nd and 23rd, as the Northern Crest Club and the Cinnamon and Norwich Club contests will be hold here.

We have decided to hold our open show on Wednesday, December 4th, writes Mr. H. C. WILKINS, the hon. sec. of the City of Birmingham C.B.S. Mr. H. W. Battye will judge, and the show will be under C.B.U. Rules.

I have had very good luck with my birds. This is the first year I have bred Canaries, and all through reading CAGE BIRDS, which I have done now for two years, and find very interesting reading in it:—L. HUMPHREY (Great Yarmouth).

I have had a splendid season, having bred a hundred Yorkshires, Crests, and Mules, thanks to CAGE BIRDS, which I have read for three years. I never bred a bird until I read CAGE BIRDS:—M. BROWN (Lordship-lane, Wood Green).

It it not generally known that the Broad Walk in Hyde Park is infested this year with Owls, and a close observer will catch sight of them perched on the highest of the trees just after sunset, ever acute for a stray mouse or other dainty morsel.

Mr. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh) is a most popular man, not only in this country, but also in Belgium. He has just returned from Antwerp where he, as usual, received a great ovation in connection with the large annual Canary festival, which takes place in that city.

Thanks for splendid plate of Canaries; it is a masterpiece. What should we fanciers do without CAGE BIRDS? I opened the paper in front of one of my cock Canaries; he started calling directly he saw it, and then burst into song.—HY. PETTIT (Horley).

Mr. D. HARWOOD, the Accrington C.B.S. secretary, writes us that Accrington Show will be held on September 27th and 28th, and not on October 18th and 19th, as originally fixed. This will be an unusually early flutter for our Northern friends, and we trust it may be successful.

Mr. G. J. WARLEY (Tulse Hill) writes:—I have been on a visit to Yorkshire and called on a local fancier at Duffield. He was not at home, but his wife, Mrs. Watt, kindly showed me into their bird room. I consider he has had a very good breeding season, he has a grand lot of youngsters—64 this season, and a good sample—many choice birds amongst them, and taking colour food grandly. I was struck with two of his old show birds, Yellow Tick first Hull, and first Selby and other honours, and was particularly taken by a young cap-marked Buff, which ought to be heard of later on the show bench. He has also bred four Goldfinch Mules.

Mr. J. J. Robson, of Great Corby, writes:—"You might mention in Twitterings that Mr. Robert Hogg, cage manufacturer and naturalist, has left Carlisle for Middlesborough, where he has taken commodious premises at 17, Bridge-street West. I feel sure all Carlisle fanciers wish him success."

We are glad to hear that after being laid on one side for eight weeks, as the result of the accident to his wrist, Mr. J. T. Carrick, the hon. sec. of the Jarrow C.B.S., has this week been able to resume work. He desires to thank the many readers of CAGE BIRDS for their kind sympathy expressed towards him.

The paint to be used for the inside of Norwich Green Show Cages can now be had from Mr. A. Thompson, 205, Smithdown-lane, Liverpool, who has been appointed by the club to supply same price 6d. per lb., post extra :—S. HADWIN, sec.

We have engaged Mr. A. Wellings to judge our members' show on November 2nd.:—J. W. BANCROFT, hon. sec., Bolton and Dist. Progressive C.B.S.

Any fancier desirous of joining the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. should do so at once, as it is necessary to be elected one month prior to annual show to be eligible to compete for members' cup, bowl, medals, and numerous other specials. All names should be sent to the hon. sec., W. HODSON, 209, Crystal Palace-road, S.E., before September 12th next. Any further particulars will be gladly given. [Advt.

A lecture which should be most interesting and instructive is announced by the West of Scotland Association for its next meeting at Nelson's Hotel, 83, Ingram-street, Glasgow, on September 7th, the subject being "The Diseases of Young Birds," and the lecturer, J. J. Manson, Esq., L.D.S. All who can should hear this lecture. Mr. Smart and his committee will be pleased to welcome any fancier or members of other societies.

Mr. C. W. Mead, secretary of the Walthamstow F.A., writes: All fanciers who are interested in the breeding of live stock should not fail to bear Mr. C. A. House lecture on In-breeding at the Workingmen's Hall, High-street, Walthamstow, on September 5th, at 7.45 p.m. Will members and friends who would like to favour me with a special for our members' show on October 31st kindly let me know as early as possible, as the schedule is ready for the printer?

Remarkable Offer to Canary Fanciers.—1,000 cwts. of Canary grit to be given away. During September and October we will give 1 cwt. of our Celebrated Health Grit absolutely free, to every purchaser of 1 cwt. of Canary seed. Giant Spanish, 24s. cwt.; finest Turkish, 15s. cwt. Samples on application. Carriage paid to nearest station. Cash with order.—John Dibb, seed importer, 31 and 33, White Abbey-road, Bradford. Tel. 247x. [Advt.

Those of our Scottish readers who are interested in British Bird and Mules should not overlook the fact that an important meeting of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club is to be held at Kirkealdy on September 7th. Amongst the business to be dealt with on that occasion is the allocation of club medals, and the proposed trophy. The club is making good headway, but Mr. Farmer would like to receive the name as a member of the club, of every lover of our native songsters in Scotland. His address is 11, South Elgin-street, Edinburgh.

A Magpie and a carrion Crow have been observed in Hyde Park. The former looked very black, no doubt owing to the London smoke; in fact, the pied plumage by which the Magpie is so widely known was almost completely hidden. The carrion Crow looked equally dirty and unkempt. A park-keeper said that this solitary Magpie has probably entered the Park to make it a sort of hermitage, to which most birds and animals like to immigrate when they have the foreboding of approaching death. The Magpie has, indeed, made few friends with the park birds, seeming most happy in the occasional company of the disreputable looking crow.

Time Brings Its Revenges.

An amusing incident was related to us the other day by a well-known trader in colour food. A little over twelve months ago the colour food man in question received an order for a shilling packet of his preparation. No cash enclosed. But the name of a well-known fancier was mentioned as recommending the purchase. After waiting a fortnight a statement was sent. No response. All subsequent applications for the money completely ignored. Exactly twelve months afterwards another similar order from the same man turned up, enclosing this time a postal order for a shilling. The colour food man has a good memory. He promptly confiscated the shilling and politely informed the sender that he was greatly obliged for the remittance twelve months overdue. Any further orders would receive his earnest and prompt attention provided cash came with them. Both letters were dated the same day exactly, the only difference being in the year.

A PRIZE COMPETITION FOR KEEPERS OF FOREIGN BIRDS.

Cash in Exchange for your Experiences.

Turn Spare Moments to Account.

In our position as Editor of this Journal, it has been borne in on us that keepers of Foreign birds are either singularly modest, or singularly reticent. Not a line does one receive from the great majority of them concerning their experiences in their own particular branch of our hobby. This is not as it should be. It affords no encouragement to others to take up the keeping of the beautiful and interesting species which reach our shores from other climes. Those on the threshold of our hobby, so to speak, must have their footsteps guided by bird-lovers who have already trodden the first paths, and can thus advise the beginner how to avoid the pit-falls besetting them, and render his path as smooth and easy to travel over as is possible. To compass this is a duty every bird-keeper owes to the birds which go to make up his pet branch of our hobby. And keepers of Foreign birds ought not to shirk their responsibilities in this direction.

There must be thousands among the readers of CAGE BIRDS, who have kept Foreign birds of various species, and have much knowledge respecting their keeping, feeding and management stored away in their heads. Put those facts on paper for the benefit of fellow lovers of Foreign birds.

To bring about this desirable end, we offer a

for the best original article on

FOREIGN BIRD KEEPING,

which reaches our offices on or before

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th NEXT.

The said article may concern the making and fitting of an aviary, the stocking and management of an aviary (either indoor or outdoor), the keeping of one particular bird only, or the keeping of a group of birds. In short,

No subject whatever which deals with Foreign Birds is barred.

RULES.

Each essay must be clearly written (or typed), on one side of paper only.

The length is left to competitors, but essays should not contain less than 1,000 words wherever possible.

Faults of spelling and grammar will not be counted against any essay, practical utility, interest, and simplicity being the chief essentials.

No name or address must be put on any essay, but each must be signed with a nom-de-plume, the sender's name and address being attached on a separate sheet of paper.

The Editor's decision will be final. Competent assistance will be called in to aid him in arriving at his decision.

All essays sent in (and any accompanying sketches or photographs) become the property of CAGE BIRDS, but all which are published (over and above the winning essay) will be duly paid for according to their worth to us.

All entries must reach CAGE BIRDS office, 154, Fleet-street, London, E.C., on or before Monday, September 23rd next. Write "Essay Competition" on top left-hand corner of envelope or package.

Wolsingham, September 11th. Judge, Mr. G. Sweet. 5 classes:—Nor., 1; Yorks., 1; A.O.V. Canary, 1; Brit., 1; Sell., 1. Prizes, 8s., 4s., 2s. Entry fee, 1s. Entries close August 31st, to Mr. T. C. Hume, Wolsingham.

"CAGE BIRDS" GREAT PRIZE COMPETITION.

£200 IN HARD CASH

To be distributed amongst owners of PRIZE CAGE BIRDS this forthcoming Show Season.

ALL SECTIONS INCLUDED.

To encourage the exhibition of prize Cage Birds, and centre public attention upon Shows advertising in "Cage Birds," we have evolved the following Great Prize Competition for Exhibitors of Cage Birds who are readers of "Cage Birds." The Show season will be starting in a few weeks, and between September and February next we propose offering Special Cash Prizes TO TOTAL A SUM OF PROBABLY not less than £200.

This amount will be distributed equally amongst the shows appearing in "Cage Birds" "Dates Fixed" Column, under the following conditions:—

CONDITIONS.

Exhibitors participating in the Competition will be required to mark each entry they make in the competition with the letters "C.B." and to fasten on the front of the entry form an adhesive Special Coupon, to be obtained only from the MANAGER, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Entry Forms and Coupons must in every case, without exception, be sent to the Secretary of the Show and not to "Cage Birds."

There will be a fresh set of numbered Coupons for each Show where the Competition is in progress. The Coupons issued for the past Shows will not be available for any subsequent event.

REMEMBER—ONE BIRD, ONE SHOW, ONE COUPON.

When entering Birds for "Cage Birds" Prize Competition and sending their entries to the Show Secretary, exhibitors must mark each entry competing in our Competition with the letters, "C.B."

PRIZES OFFERED.

The prizes offered by "Cage Birds" at each Show taking part will be

10/-, 6/-, AND 4/- IN CASH

to be allotted respectively to

The Best FIRST PRIZE Bird,
The Best SECOND PRIZE Bird,
The Best THIRD PRIZE Bird,

to be judged irrespective of sex, variety of breed, selected from birds entered for "C.B." Competition prizes.

IMPORTANT.

The winning birds at each Show will be debarred from winning another "C.B." prize at any subsequent event.

COST OF COUPONS TO COMPETITORS.

The cost to competitors of each coupon will be Sixpence, and coupons must be purchased from "Cage Birds" for each Show at least four days before date of advertised closing of entries.

DISTRIBUTION OF PROFITS.

Whatever profit (if any) accrues from this scheme will (after 25 % has been deducted to cover postage and working expenses) be distributed among the societies participating in it in the proportion that entries are received from each show. If the scheme results on the whole in a loss, the loss will be borne entirely by "Cage Birds."

THE GRAND FINAL.

By special arrangement with the Crystal Palace show authorities, at the Great National Show on January 31st, 1908, the winners of all "C.B." coupon prizes during the season up to date may compete, and the sum of

will be divided as follows:—

£5 for the best First Prize bird,
£2 10s. for the best Second Prize bird,
£1 10s. for the best Third Prize bird,
£1 for the best Fourth Prize bird,

selected from birds so entered—winners of our coupon prizes which secure Firsts, Seconds, Thirds, or Fourths at the Crystal Palace Show.

Exhibitors must note that coupons will not by themselves entitle them to exhibit birds. Entries must be made in the ordinary way, and the cost of coupons regarded as additional fees for additional prizes.

TO SECRETARIES AND SHOW PROMOTERS.

Societies wishing to participate in this competition must

1. Guarantee to advertise their show in CAGE BIRDS to the extent of not less than 25/-.
2. Insert the full conditions of the scheme in a page in their schedules and catalogues.
3. Make application to the Manager of CAGE BIRDS on or before the third Thursday in September next.

The rules of each show shall prevail in each case, but in any dispute not covered by such rules the decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS shall be final.

This competition is certain to benefit shows in the following ways:—

1. It will increase entries considerably at every show taking part in the competition.
2. It will ensure an entry of good quality birds at each exhibition.
3. It will heighten the excitement and increase the interest attaching to each show, and so secure increased publicity for those ventures.

Address all suggestions, applications, &c., to F. CARL, 154, Fleet Street, London.

SHOW DATES FIXED.

To secure insertion in this column a guarantee that the show will be advertised in "C.B." to the extent of at least 25/- must be sent to our manager.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of compliant written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

A Wheezy Noise.

Avalon. — For the birds that make the noise you mention, give in the drinking water fifteen drops of Syrup of Tolu and six drops of Paregoric, fresh daily; continue this for three weeks. Give the hen you say drinks so much water, two grains of Bromide of Ammonia in two tablespoonsful of water, which has been previously boiled and allowed to cool. Let her have this fresh daily for a week, and then on alternate days for another week. You may also give her a teaspoonful of egg-food twice a week, to which add as much Aromatic Confection as will stand on a threepenny piece.

A Convalescent.

No Name. — As you say your hen is improving under the treatment I advised, you cannot do better than continue it until she has finished the moult, when I think you will find she will then be all right again. You may put a piece of mutton suet between the bars of the cage for her to peck at. Keep her covered over at night with a warm cloth. No, it is not infectious, and you need have no fear of your other birds catching it. Of course, you are keeping this bird by itself whilst under treatment.

YORKSHIRES.

Answered by H. W. BATTYE.

Mice or Hen—Which?

Avalon.—Sorry to hear of your young bird that you found with its inside torn to pieces. Mice are not certain to have been the guilty parties, but disturbing the hen may have been the indirect cause. I am inclined to think you have got hold of a cannibal hen. I don't think anyone will be very successful with breeding who is overrun with mice, and from what you write in respect to your bird-room, I don't think you will be able to get rid of the mice only by removing. I was, some years' ago, plagued with the same thing, and managed to arrange my room so that they could not get in, but would prefer removing to doing the same again.

Size of Cage, and Plucking.

Rose Campbell.—Fifteen young Canaries is far to many to keep in one cage of the size you name. Watch them and try to find out whether it is one or two, or all the lot are alike guilty of plucking. If there are one or two that don't seem as badly plucked as the rest, those are very likely the worst offenders. Six or eight birds are as many as I should care to keep in a cage like yours. Get another cage or two, or better still, cage them singly, until they have grown their feathers, as having contracted the habit of plucking, they will be some time before they break it off again and the best and the safest way would be to cage them singly. If you cannot do so, tie several lengths of soft string to the cage wires; these will engage their attention, and help to keep them from plucking. Feeding will do very well, and separating is the only safe way to break them off the habit.

Sneezing and Gaping.

T. B. Blackburn.—I expect your bird has been played with when kept in hanging-cage, before you purchased it. For the next three weeks, let its staple food be white canary seed, giving every other day a little egg-food, to which add four drops of Parrish's chemical food and a pinch of sugar, well mixing the lot, and then sprinkle a pinch of maw seed over it. For two weeks, try in its drinking water to each two tablespoonsful of water ten drops each of Paregoric, Tincture of Lobelia, and whiskey. Stop the hemp, niger, and black rape, and give very little green food; the suet or bacon will do no harm.

Squeaking and Moulting.

A Reader.—Your bird evidently caught a cold some time ago, perhaps from being in a draught, and this may have been the cause of its dropping into the moult earlier than it otherwise would have done. Most birds are, or ought to be, in the moult by this. You say the bird squeaks when it tries to call, for this you might try ten drops each of Tincture of Lobelia and Paregoric in the bird's drinking water, fresh daily for two weeks, and in addition to its ordinary seed, give on alternate days, a little egg-food, well mixing with six drops of Syrup of Buckthorn. Continue this for one week, and then substitute six drops of Parrish's Chemical Food in place of the Buckthorn, for another week. The loss of his two toe nails will not be a serious detriment to his breeding. To cut the toe nails, use a pair of very sharp scissors, holding the foot before the window or some other strong light, when you will be able to see a thin red streak running down the claw; be very careful not to cut into this red line, or you will cause it to bleed. The ruffled feathers on one side will probably come out all right when the bird finishes his moult.

ROLLERS.

A Mixed Trio.

Young Rollers.—(1) It is against the rules to recommend any particular advertiser, but if you write to any of the large bird specialists advertising in CAGE BIRDS, they will be able to supply you with a good bird organ for teaching young Rollers. These organs, in fact, were being advertised in our columns only a few weeks ago. The best class of bird-organ, with mechanical action, costs about £3 or £3 10s. (2) There is no definite period for Rollers to moult, so much depending on circumstances. The worst of the moult ought to be over in about a period of eight weeks—in fact, eight to ten weeks should cover the time the moult lasts. Early-hatched young birds invariably commence moulting before late-hatched ones. (3) You ought to have stated at what age the hen plucked the young. Many hens will pull out feathers when anxious to build again, but, as the young are then generally out of the nest, one can easily meet this case by transferring the youngsters to a nursery cage. The hen which plucks her babies while they are still in the nest is a great nuisance, and deserves (and no doubt often gets), a sudden death. Such a hen should never have the cock bird left with her while sitting, and feeding the young. You don't want to discard your hen, if possible, to obviate it, seeing she is so good a feeder.

BELGIANS.

Answered by W. B. COBB.

Young Belgian Dying Swollen.

Meesie.—There are so many causes to account for young Belgians dying, that numerous precautions might be suggested; but from what you describe, I conclude the deaths to be due to inflammation, probably brought on by the cold changes we have experienced in the weather this season, or by the feeding. You do not say what you fed the parents with. If the remaining youngsters are doing for themselves, and show signs of swelling, I should advise you to give milk sop, sprinkling on a little maw seed, giving plain canary seed in hopper; discontinue hemp seed, and add say, six drops of whiskey in their drinking water.

Swelling near Vent.

M. Henby.—From your description, the swelling is not caused from inflammation; had it been, it would have killed the bird ere now. I would recommend you to bathe the part with lukewarm water, and then anoint with a little Hamamelis Cerate (procurable from any chemist) for a few days, when probably the lump will disappear; meanwhile keep the bird on a diet of plain canary seed and milk sop.

LIZARDS.

Answered by BARKER CLEGG.

Capless Lizard.

Glendene.—The young Lizard without trace of a cap is not an unusual occurrence at all. It will not have any cap after the moult, but it will be an entirely different bird to what it appears now. I am very fond of a non-cap bird, and no doubt you will be the same, that is, if the bird develops anything like an average quality of spangle and colour. Your young Lizards are all right. Don't get disappointed, the lines or rowing which you have illustrated to me, are the indications of the future spangling. It will be a most interesting time for you just now to watch the changing of the plumage; you will soon see the moons appearing, and I hope in profusion to answer your desires in the same perfection as you have seen at the shows. I presume you are colour feeding. It is most essential that you do so, if you wish to exhibit them. Young Lizards should be kept in separate cages and covered up; they must be kept quiet to prevent the plumage from getting damaged. Write again to CAGE BIRDS when in doubt.

BORDERS.

Answered by J. PATTERSON.

Various.

Redrol. — Single out all birds fit for show, and keep by themselves. See that their tails and flight feathers are all straight. If any are frayed pull out. Cover bird over with some thin cotton. Do this gradually by putting it at back of cages, and bringing it forward a little every day, so that your birds may get used to finding their way about. Let their staple food be good sound Spanish canary seed, and every other day add half a teaspoonful of the following mixture: One part German rape, and half maw seed, go'd of pleasure Linseed and hemp. Should your birds not take to the linseed, use a pinch twice a week in egg food. Crushed egg food on the alternate days, and once a week add a teaspoonful of Chemical Food to one egg and three Osborne biscuits. Mix well with the hands and allow half a teaspoonful per bird. You need not be so lavish with the seeds and egg food, for your stock birds. Allow the bath once a week early in the morning on sunny days. (2) Unless you have quality and colour bred into your birds, you will not be able to bring it out. Keep scrupulously clean, and protect from sun's rays, and when half way through give a piece of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea in water once a fortnight; also add to their diet a small piece of boiled carrot twice a week. (3) A little of each is all right as a change once a week, but they should not have it oftener, as their bowels at this stage are easily relaxed, and a lot of birds die from this cause every year.

Sore Feet.

Ned. — Catch the bird daily, and bathe the foot in water, blood-warm, to which add a little Jeyes' Fluid until it is the colour of port wine. Let the foot remain in the water a few minutes; take it out and rub your fingers down towards the toes, repeat same two or three times, until you see him standing firmly on it. (2) No, the spur will not grow again. (3) Yes, it would be a slight drawback on the show-bench in keen competition; it is always an eyesore, and, therefore, a few points against him, but don't be afraid to send him out if otherwise perfect. It is seldom we find a bird perfect in every point.

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Is Colour-food Injurious?

J.L.—If given according to the directions supplied with it, the particular colour food you mention will not injure birds. Saffron is used by many of our leading breeders, and is generally considered beneficial during the moult, not only for its colouring properties, but because of the medicinal effect which it exercises. Speaking generally, colour feeding is not injurious if practised with discretion, but if it is used injudiciously and foolishly, harm is certain to result.

Are Greens Colour-fed?

Duffer.—No, Greens are not colour-fed, but the natural colour can be very much improved by careful feeding. Read reply to X.Y.Z., in CAGE BIRDS, July 26th, 1906, the whole subject of moulting Greens is there gone into. The scale of points differs from the Yorkshire and Norwich standard, for instance, 35 points are given for colour, which is very much in excess of the standards of the Clear varieties. The standards of points for both the Norwich and Yorkshire types of Greens will be found in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL.

Unfertile Eggs.

Inexperienced.—The breeding season is now over, and you can do nothing this year. Although you do not say so, I gather you have tried your hen with the two cock birds you mention, and yet all seventeen eggs have been unfertile. You speak of the hen laying when she has been by herself. This leads me to think you have not been acting fairly towards your hen, and the reason the eggs have been unfertile is because she has not been properly mated. As I say, nothing more can be done this season, and before next season comes round, I should advise you to secure some practical manual dealing with Canaries, and act according to its instructions. You should have paired your hen, and let the cock remain with her right through the season.

Pink-eyed or Black.

Lucky.—The mere fact that a bird has pink eyes does not make it more valuable than a dark-eyed one, except for Mule breeding, and even in this direction many people question the old-fashioned idea of a pink-eyed hen being the best for Muling. If a Mule breeder had the opportunity of choosing between two really good birds, one pink-eyed and the other not, he would doubtless select the former, but if the pink-eyed bird was inferior to the dark-eyed one, his preference would be for the latter. I am glad to know you have had such good luck with your birds this season. Mr. A. C. Yorke, Secretary Fanciers' Society, Stoke-road, Guildford, is the address you require. Mr. H. E. Parratt, Grove Place, Weyhridge, will give you any information you may require about Weybridge Show, which is to be held on December 4th. The value of the bird you mention would depend entirely upon its ability to win prizes. It might be worth £10, or, not as many shillings.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Moulting Bullfinch.

D.C.B.—Have answered this question at length some time within the last three weeks; look it up. Let the bird have a fair supply of linseed in its stock mixture, but no hemp whatever. A little maw and sunflower daily should be allowed—or safflower seed, which looks like a kind of miniature sunflower seed. The chief point is to offer all the natural colouring agents, in the shape of fruits and berries and weeds, you can lay hands on. You can get dewherries now, and plenty of blackberries in a short time; then plenty of Privet berries. Other suitable things are ripe black berries, cherries, raspberries (Bullies are great fruit eaters, remember), dock, plantain, thistles, shepherd's purse, chickweed. See "Wild Plant" article now running in the columns of "C.B." A most important point in the production of gloss in the plumage is a free use of the bath. A bird which is not a free bather never comes out so polished as one that revels in cold water—the difference is plainly to be seen. If your Bullie is lax in this respect, he must be lightly sprayed every day with a fine sprayer (such as barbers use for bay rhum, etc.), which may be bought from most fanciers' specialists advertising in our columns. Never drench the bird.

Crossbill: British or not?

Cymro.— Your description is a very good one of a male Crossbill in wild plumage. When house-moulted the red in the plumage will not be reproduced. Most of the exhibition specimens seen are as ruddy in the coat as a huntsman; still, a good house-moulted specimen, though it may not be so gorgeous to look upon, stands quite as good a chance on the show-bench under any judge who knows his business. Your specimen may be either a Foreigner (imported), or a British caught one. No one could tell, except the person who imported it, or he who caught it. Crossbills come over to England in hundreds during the season, from the Continent. So do Siskins, etc. No one worries over the question of nationality, because no one can say, by looking at the birds, whether they are British or Foreign. So you will gather that you can safely exhibit your Crossbill under any judge, as a "British bird." Give it plenty of sunflower seed, also fruit pips (cores of apples, etc.), and don't forget a few mealworms daily, and any other suitable grubs and insects you can hunt out for him.

Moulting Bullie and Canary.

O.H.B.—I have lately frequently explained how to prepare colour food. Pity you did not refer to recent back numbers. The usual way with Canary fanciers is mix the colouring agent with egg and bread (or biscuit). The egg bread is prepared in the evening, and pepper mixed with it in about the proportion of one to four. In the morning it is fed to the birds—a good teaspoonful to each. Briefly, that is the method, for detailed particulars consult a good book on Canaries, or the several lectures on this subject in recent numbers of "C.B." It is too lengthy to give here in extenso. Commence with a small quantity of pepper only, and gradually work up to the strength mentioned above. If your young Bullie is fond of soft food, he will be able to use the same mixture as the hen Canary you mention. A cage 1ft. by 1ft. 6in. is, however, certainly not large enough for the two birds—is not big enough for even one. Three foot by sixteen inches from back to front would be about right. I think it would be an excellent plan to moult the couple together. Most colour-food vendors send out with their goods instructions for their use. Note another reply this week on the moulting of Bullfinches.

A Love Affair.

Sarah M.—I don't know that you did any particular harm through not mating up the two Goldfinches. You certainly lost an excellent opportunity of trying an interesting experiment in breeding, however. Most fanciers, I think, having a hen Goldie which laid in her cage "six virgin eggs" as you put it, would be only too anxious to try her either with the cock Goldie, or with a cock Siskin, Linnet, or Redpoll, with the view of producing Hybrids. It is not often that hen Goldies show themselves so ready to breed in captivity. To sum up: I certainly think it would have been best had you mated up this hen—to the cock Goldie, if you so pleased. With regard to the watery excreta, try the treatment recommended "No name" in this issue.

Name Bird and Treatment.

A. J. P.—The bird you describe, and which builds in the hedge bottom, laying lovely blue eggs, is the Hedge Sparrow. Hedge Accentor is the correct name, the bird not being even remotely related to Philip Sparrow, Esq., of House-top, Everywhere. The Hedge Sparrow, in fact, is an insectivorous bird, and so must be fed on insectivorous, or "soft" food when in captivity. It does not usually make a good cage pet, unless taken young, adult caught birds being, as a rule, wild and intractable. A little Canary seed is eaten with relish, as a change, the bird feeding on small seeds and berries during winter. It has a song more remarkable for its sprightly, cheerful character than beauty of tone or variety. It is a most common sound of the countryside, and I should have thought it would have been well known to all bird-lovers. The Hedge Sparrow makes a good aviary bird, though of a retiring nature, and sings.

Talking Birds.

Novice.—There is a little choice between Magpie and Jay for talking purposes, but the Jackdaw comes a long way behind either. If I were compelled to plump for one or other of the former birds, I should vote for the Jay—possibly, however. I am prejudiced by the fact that I have heard more talking Jays than I have Magpies, and some wonderfully good ones, too. A fresh-caught bird is not the one to tackle with a view to producing a first-class talker and mimic. A young hand-reared specimen is what you ought to get. If well treated and petted and fussed, it is surprising how soon most of them begin to learn whistles and words and little tricks. All three species mentioned are about equally suited to captive life. There is, practically speaking, no limit to the size of the cage—it should be as large as can be conveniently compassed. One of the best places I have ever seen for a Jay was made out of a packing case which had originally contained a pianoforte. A very nice outside place would be one 5ft. long, 3ft. high, and 2ft. from front to back, with a lean-to (sloping) roof. This must be made absolutely water-proof, and have a "weather-board"—that is, a strip of suitable width to fit along the front, at the bottom, to prevent rain, etc., beating in.

Fresh Caught Linnets Dying.

Humane.—There is, as I suppose no one needs telling, a percentage of deaths among all species of fresh-caught birds, and this is not entirely avoidable, for all birds (even of the species) are not the same either in disposition or constitution, and do not possess the same "resistive power" to meet and successfully cope with their changed food and circumstances. The same thing is seen among animals of all kinds, and among human beings, too, whom circumstance takes into foreign climes. All one can do is to try, by offering food as near Nature's food as possible, to bring the percentage of loss down to the minimum—down to 0 where possible. Certainly, you ought not to have such losses amongst your newly-caught Linnets. Possibly, however, your birds had been in the catcher's or dealer's hands some little time before they reached you, or had undergone a railway journey. These things, I am compelled to say, would be all against their chances of survival. Newly caught Linnets must have some "soft seeds" to feed upon. These are conveniently found in seeding shepherd's purse, plantain, chickweed, charlock, groundsel, thistles, and the like; also soaked summer rape and charlock, given when just commencing to germinate or sprout, must be supplied. They should be offered maw seed, linseed, Canary, teazle, and lightly cracked hemp (fresh made every day). For half-a day on every second day, let them have water made slightly saline with sulphate of soda—a teaspoonful dissolved in a pint of water.

Bullfinch Ailing.

H.B.B.—I am afraid this answer will be too late to effect any good. Judging by the symptoms you detail, the Bullie must be very queer indeed. I should clear out his bowels by one dose of sulphate of soda—as much as will cover a shilling, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. The main thing to do, however, is to provide a complete change of diet. Any ripe, wild seeding plants (dock, shepherd's purse, chickweed, thistles, groundsel, plantain, etc.), would be helpful, especially any such as sow thistles, covered with "smother-fly." Also offer a few tiny mealworms frequently. Bullies are largely fruit-eaters, remember, and should be regularly offered any kinds that seem at all suitable—of dew, black and privet berries, they are passionately fond. Let him have plenty of mawseed, while a teaspoonful of good ant's eggs, which have been soaked in milk, would no doubt be greatly relished. The latter should never be allowed to turn sour; prepare them afresh frequently. He might not object to a little high-grade insectivorous food being mixed with the ants' eggs. Anything that tempts him to feed is likely to be the chief factor in the bird's recovery—if he is to be pulled round.

Young Bullfinches—and Old.

Foster Mother.—I certainly think the head-feathers on the young Bullie will come all right with the moult. If the place seems irritable at all, you can try anointing it gently twice daily with Zambuk, if you like; or no doubt hazeline cream (or ointment) would be equally efficacious for the purpose. If the bird will not bathe, by all means lightly sponge him on suitable days; don't drench him at any time, however. With regard to the old Bullfinches, the difficulty of getting them to feed and rear their young in a cage or aviary (you don't make it clear, by the-bye, whether yours is an indoor or outdoor place), is one which is usually experienced, and which is hard to overcome. Most fanciers prefer to entrust the eggs to foster-mothers, generally hen Canaries. Not, however, that many succeed in getting a pair of Bullfinches to build, and hatch out young, in captivity. Still, hen Bullies used for Hybrid breeding are usually found most unreliable. Some won't sit out their time; others will hatch, but then won't feed; few successfully launch their young into the world. Why, is too lengthy a matter to discuss here. Instead of egg-bread, try feeding them with a high-grade insectivorous food, containing plenty of good ants' eggs. Also offer freely tiny mealworms, any sow-thistles (or other harmless foliage) smothered with blight (smother-ily), live ants' eggs, if procurable, and give liberally the seeding wild foods I am so frequently recommending.

Watery Excreta.

No Name.—I agree that it is a very unpleasant state of things when a bird makes the draw-board in such an offensive condition. It is not difficult to remedy, though. Let your Linnet have plenty of mawseed to eat, and a liberal supply of ripe plantain-stalks, seeding shepherd's purse, and thistle-tops (opening them, if necessary). You should certainly not let the bird have the run of unlimited hemp, niger and linseed. Feed it on this stock mixture: canary two pints, teazle one pint, summer rape and charlock half-pint each. Give a pinch of the other seeds occasionally. A little linseed may be regularly allowed once the bowels regain their normal condition. For four days dissolve in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much citrate of iron as will lie on a threepennypiece. Afterwards, mix into the same quantity of water ten drops of tincture of gentian, continuing it over such a period as seems necessary. Scrub the cage bottom regularly with hot soda and water—a little disinfectant would make an improvement. The above medicines can be obtained of any chemist for a few pence.

Briefiets.

A Weed (H. Amos).—The specimen you enclose is shepherd's purse.

Shepherd's Purse (J. A. P.).—A sample sprig of shepherd's purse has been duly posted you.

Another Weed (G. D.).—The weed you enclose is a trefoil. Have never, to my knowledge, offered it to birds. I know of no reason why the seed it contains should be harmful, and don't think you would find it in anyway so. Shepherd's purse has heart shaped, flattened seed-pods, which run up the stem.

A Disinfectant (New Hobby).—There must be something wrong for an indoor aviary to need "perfume." What a strange idea this). Regularly cleaned out and well sanded, no smell should be observed. There are many good disinfectants you may use—try Sanitas, or Jeyes', according to directions on bottle.

Back to Captivitv (H. Hay).—Your account of the Linnet which returned to its cage is very interesting, and no doubt the Editor will find space for it in another column. The singing of Linnet No. 2 no doubt helped to keep him round the house, acting the part of the song of a "call-bird." But no doubt hunger played the chief part in his return—he recollected (or Little Mary reminded him of) a certain spot where food was always plentiful, and this brought him into his cage again.

A Weed (D. W. Burkinshaw).—I could find no weed accompanying your letter. Are you certain you enclosed same? You had better post on another specimen.

Food Recipes (W. Bullough).—I do not know of any book which gives all the food recipes you mention. You would have to purchase various works (Canaries, British, Foreign Birds) to get them. Even then you would not get every one, for most fanciers have some pet recipe or other of their own.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Green Parrot Ill.

My bird has been ill for several weeks, seems to have severe pains and straining, clenches its foot and appears as if it would fall from perch. How can I treat it?—E. WRIGHT.

E. Wright.—It would have been better if you had applied at once; delays are not good in such cases. For one day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water (two tablespoonfuls), and let it have only this to drink for the day; the next two days put two drops of laudanum in the same quantity of drinking water. You can repeat the magnesia as necessary to keep its bowels moving freely, but not watery loose. Diet: As it is a young bird, give for a time about a tablespoonful of boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day) daily. Its staple diet should consist of two parts canary and white oats, and one part each wheat, dari, Indian corn, hemp, and sunflower seeds. As extras and to vary the diet, give rape fruit, plain biscuits (dry), nuts, greenfood, grit, cuttlefish, and water ad lib. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatever. If relief is not given in ten or twelve days' time, repeat query with full details.

What Bird?

Kindly give name and correct food for bird as per description enclosed?—D.B.V.

D.B.V.—It is a Swainson's, or Blue Mountain, or Blue-bellied Lorikeet (Trichoglossus novæ-hollandiæ), a native of Eastern Australia. I am a firm believer in giving the Loriidæ milk sop, and also sweetened boiled rice, and I have yet to come across the species that is not the better for it. It is a dangerous food in some hands I am aware, but this is only the result of gross carelessness; if prepared as follows, it will keep 24 hours in the hottest weather we ever get. The method is very simple: Crush the required amount of biscuit (Osborne or plain Arrowroot), well sweeten with Demarara sugar (say, two teaspoonsful to a teacupful of milk), add the required quantity of milk to leave it sloppy, boil the whole up together and give to the birds when cool. In addition to this you must keep the food vessels strictly clean, and place them in such a position that the bird cannot foul them. In addition you would of course give as much ripe fruit as they will eat, with greenfood, cuttlefish and water ad. lib. Keep a tin of the following mixture in their cage: Canary, millet, oats and hemp, equal parts of the first three, and a quarter part only of the hemp. They are a hardy and enduring species, if not kept in too small a cage, at the same time they must be protected against draught.

Bauer's Parrakeets.

Please give me details as to food and general treatment?—J. G. M.

J. G. M.—Bauer's Parrakeet (Platycercus zonarius) is a native of Australia and decidedly uncommon on the English market. It thrives on the treatment generally given to the Platycerci. which you are giving. I have mostly kept my Platycerci with a mixed series in an outdoor aviary, where they have had access to a varied diet, and they certainly helped themselves to a little of each, including soft food and mealworms, with no ill effects. It must be borne in mind that they had plenty of space for exercise; if confined in a cage I should advise merely the seed mixture, ripe fruit, greenfood, grit and cuttlefish, being given with, of course, water ad. lib. All this family are very fond of grass in the ear, and it is one of the most wholesome greenfoods for them, and they cannot have too much of it, so that it is neither sodden with wet nor frosted, and if it has insect life on it, so much the better. I am of the opinion that during the moult several live insects daily are a help, at least I have found it so and give them; I must however, qualify this by saying that I am referring only to the Platycerci in this instance, and this must not be applied to Parrakeets and Parrots in general.

Amazon in Moult.

My Amazon is in the moult; it is fed as you advise in "C.B." and it appears in good health, though a little mopish. Does it require any special treatment at this time?—F. P.

F. P.—The most important thing is to keep a watch on the general health of the bird during the moulting period; if this appears good, let well alone. If there is any sign of constipation a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia, half a teaspoonful over its boiled maize, should remedy this; the bowels should move freely, but not be watery loose. In case of any signs of weakness, etc., a course of Parrish's Chemical Food is as good as anything; well colour its drinking water with same, this can be continued till the bird is in condition again. Encourage the bird as much as possible to take exercise, and to eat plenty of ripe fruit, greenfood and cuttlefish. If there appears any difficulty in reproducing its feathers lightly dust its boiled maize with flour or flowers of sulphur for a short period in conjunction with the chemical food. The bird should have its bath regularly, and if it will not bathe, should be sprayed with clear water just chilled; it must be kept out of draughts till dry at the same time it should get plenty of fresh air.

Young Parrot Indisposed.

I have a Parrot 9 months old; every time it eats anything a scum seems to come on each side of its mouth. Can you give me a cure for it?—"OAKPOLLY."

"Oakpolly."—If "Oakpolly" will send me kind of Parrot and full details as to how it is being fed and treated, I may be in a position to help; at present I can but suggest a palliative. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in two tablespoonsful of water, and let it have only this to drink for that day; this can be repeated at intervals of three days, providing its bowels are not watery loose. On the days you are not giving the magnesia, dissolve 20 grains of chlorate of potassium in one ounce of water and let the bird have only this to drink for a few days; and in addition if it will let you handle it, wipe out its mouth (using a small camel's hair brush), with a small portion of the following mixture: 20 grains chlorate of potassium dissolved in two drachms of glycerine. Feed as advised regularly in this paper, see replies to other correspondents in this and past issues. Repeat query with details as above and I will try and give you more definite help.

Grey Parrot with Worms.

How can I get rid of worms in a grey Parrot? It's dict is that recommended in C.B.—"E.B."

E.B.—Take as much powdered areca nut as will lie on sixpence, and dust it over a piece of moistened (with water) biscuit, try several doses in all, on alternate days. If this fails, try a slightly smaller quantity of jalap, not more than two doses. By all means let it have a piece of raw carrot daily, this will take the place of greenfood. In a week's time put it on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food, for directions see replies to other querists in this issue. You had better report progress in ten days' time. You say nothing as to the birds general condition, give this when next writing.

Treatment of Tovi Parrakeets.

I followed your advice, and purchased a Tovi last autumn, but unfortunately it died during the winter. Can you suggest any improvement in the diet, or can you suggest another species equally tame and more hardy?—"DONALD."

Donald.—I think you were unfortunate in your specimen, and consider it very probable that the disease was already there when the bird came into your possession; however, I should say here, that even hardy species succumb to the effects of sudden chills, such would account for the malady which took off your bird, but, of course, not for the mites, which you could have got rid of by spraying with quassia solution. I should advise you to get another Tovi and let its staple diet be canary and white millet, with as much ripe fruit as it will eat from its staple diet; white oats and a little hemp can be given occasionally as a change, a tender leaf of fresh lettuce, could also be given daily. In other respects, treat as you did your previous specimen. With many species of Parrakeets it is the hardships and unsanitary conditions of importation, and some dealers' shops, which are responsible for the many and discouraging losses with new purchases, which apparently do well for a short time, then suddenly become ill and "shuffle off" in spite of every care. As a precaution, I should well scald out and cleanse the cage before using again for another bird, which I hope you will have better luck with. Such misfortunes as yours are the lot of most aviculturists (however experienced), more or less with new purchases.

Young Grey Cardinals Dying.

E.M.F.—Your disappointing experience with the nestling Cardinals is a very common one; I have just returned from my holidays, and found under the nest three large, well-formed callow green Cardinals, the same thing has occurred four times this season; in my case, owing to the mixture I keep together, I cannot keep up a supply of live insects, as well as not being on the spot to offer it every hour or so. If you get another brood this season, supply the soft food as recommended in my previous reply; and keep them going with live insects. These birds practically rear their young on nothing else, and give them variety, too, such as mealworms, cockroaches, spiders, living ants' cocoons, gentles; in fact, anything almost that flys and crawls that you can capture for them, and if possible, they should be supplied to them, say, every hour, or, at any rate, as often as possible during daylight, and some beetles could be left in a demon trap over night. If the platform of trap was removed, the birds would help themselves as soon as it was light. Supply also continuous supplies of such ripe fruit and greenfood as they favour. It is a lot of trouble, but it is only so that many species of insectivorous birds can be reared, for many of them that will readily feed on soft food mixture themselves, will only rear their progeny on live stuff. If you have the leisure to do this, you should succeed with the next brood.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary (B. Zelzer).—This bird, and probably the other live, died of bird fever. Instructions as to isolation and disinfection have often been given.

Orange-cheek Waxbill (E.H.S.).—Enlargement and inflammation of liver, involving the lungs, and ending with rupture of blood vessels. These are the incidents of acclimatisation, and while some birds struggle through, many succumb. The excess of food and want of efficient exercise is the root of the mischief.

Canary (W. Gout).—Septic inflammation of liver, lungs and bowels, ending with apoplexy. All your cages and appliances should be disinfected with boric acid solution, one teaspoonful to a pint of boiling water.

GENERAL.

Answered by the EDITOR.

Cuttings (A. W. Curtis).—We are greatly indebted to you for the interesting cuttings you have so courteously sent us.

Illustrated Ideas (R. H. Fell).—Your remarks noted. The idea you mention will be dealt with when opportunity occurs.

Who are the Real Owners? (Fairfield.)—Why do you not sign your name and address? Are you afraid you won't have a "fair field." This seems to us a matter for your club to ventilate. If the same birds are really exhibited alternately by two different exhibitors, the matter, as you say, is most unsatisfactory, but you must bring good evidence to substantiate such a charge before we can deal with it.

Reliable Dealer Wanted (D.B.)—We cannot oblige you by undertaking such a commission. We did so once before to oblige a reader, but never again! You want a young Grey male Parrot. Well, either advertise your requirements, or use your own judgment in answering advertisements, and deposit money before you purchase the bird. Sorry we can't help you further.

Anecdote (Old Fancier of 30 years).—Your story might give offence to our more sensitive readers, and some ladies might put a very sinister construction upon it, otherwise we would print it, as it is certainly very funny.

Box Makers (J.W.P.).—Your query signed "W.P." was received by us. You asked for the addresses of light box-makers, and we gave you a list of such in CAGE BIRDS of last week. You now ask for "the addresses of makers of light boxes, suitable for sending birds away." We don't think any of the firms, whose addresses we gave make bird boxes, neither do we know of a firm which does. A local carpenter would be the best man to supply what you want in this direction.

A Hoax (E.B.).—You will see that the story of the Parrots and the Palm Nuts was quoted by us from the paper you mention. Had it been an original article we could have given you the name and address asked for. You should write to the paper from whose columns we quoted the article.

Puppy Sold (A. Sinclair).—We do not undertake to settle disputes concerning carriage, or would gladly try to assist you.

A Little Corner Wanted (B. Peleman).—Certainly; always delighted to oblige our Belgian friends.

Complaint Cancelled (M. E. Berry).—Glad to hear you are now satisfied with our advertiser.

Coloured Plates (T. Heasman). — Since the beginning of the year we have issued three coloured plates. The production of a coloured plate involves a big expense and is not to be entered on lightly. We do not, as a rule, give any coloured plates in the off season. The season will soon start and then you can expect to see some very fine ones, as usual.

Volumes (A. Doyle).—Sorry, no use. Our requirements are now filled.

Novice Competition (J. A. Wilkinson).—Sorry your p.c. was not received in time.

The Challenge Trophy, a silver shield value £7 7s., presented by the News of the World to the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. for the best bird on show (open classes), is now on view at the headquarters of the society, "The Herne," Peckham Rye, S.E., and is a splendid work of art. Two Lancashire classes are being guaranteed by Messrs. Goodwin and Rogers, who each offer a special, likewise Mr. F. J. Green. Mr. Lovesy has presented the complete work, "Japan's Fight for Freedom," handsomely bound, for the best bird shown by a novice member, and the society are offering a gold medal, value £1 1s., for most entries. Altogether things look very rosy. Mr. R. S. Crisp, the popular president of the S.Y.C.C., is one of the latest recruits to join the ranks of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.:—Thus writes Mr. G. F. WOOLHOUSE.

CANARY NOTES IN BRIEF.

By CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

MOULTING MEMORANDA.

As previously intimated in these notes, the moulting season will be an early one, and is already well in progress. Breeding should, therefore, be quite a thing of the past, even the late breeding pairs, from which it was hoped to snatch a catch brood, should be broken up with as little delay as possible in every case where this has not been already done, and every bird that it is intended to colour feed should be well on the feed by now. No matter whether they have commenced to drop feathers or not, or even if they show no signs of dropping into moult — feed them on the feed. Any procrastination now in doing this will be practically certain to result in more or less patchiness in colour at the end of the moult.

NON-COLOUR FEEDING AIDS.

Where colour-feeding in the usual straight-forward acceptance of the term is objected to, there is still the ancient and out-of-date method of adding tone to the colour by providing a free and regular supply of the rich-coloured blossoms of marigolds and nasturtiums, which many birds will devour with the greatest relish, and which are probably just as harmless, and not more so, as the orthodox pepper-feeding. Properly used, they will give a delicate soft and bloomy tone of colour just sufficient to give the birds a decided advantage over a bird that has not been assisted in this way, and yet not enough to enable them to compete with a chance of success against pepper-fed birds—that is, of course, meaning the pimento which is now, unfortunately, universally known as cold pepper. Years ago before pepper feeding was discovered, this method of feeding on these blossoms was a recognised form of legitimate colour-feeding, now-a-days it is disregarded as such, but serves all too often the ignoble purpose of improving the colour of so-called non-fed birds, and thus giving them an unfair advantage over specimens genuinely shown as unfed. By knowing the methods employed, the newest beginner may be on equal terms with the older hands.

COVERING THE CAGES.

To obtain the best results in colour, whether in colour-fed or natural colour birds, it is essential to tone down the light whilst the new plumage is growing, as the yellow of the canary's plumage, like practically all other yellow tints, is very susceptible to the bleaching effects of sunlight. Many novices, however, carry this point to excess, by darkening the cages until the bird can barely see to get about. This is neither necessary nor advisable. By keeping the cages in semi-darkness, one is apt to be unconsciously fostering insect pests, as well as dirt and general stuffiness, which means paving the way for the outbreak of disease.

CREAM OR BUFF BLINDS.

If the birds are in a room by themselves every good and useful end will be gained by simply keeping cream or buff blinds down before the windows, with, perhaps, in well-lighted rooms, curtains of the finest material over a small part of those cages that are nearest the windows. In all other positions, that is, where the cages are scattered about in a variety of rooms used as living rooms, a curtain of very thin muslin, cream or buff, covering about two-thirds of the front of the cage wires, will serve all practical purposes, without cutting off the light sufficient to hamper the bird's movements, or deter them from moving about just as much as they feel inclined to do.

WHEN TO COVER.

Do not cover over the cages or draw the blinds immediately the birds are put up for moulting. There is no real necessity to obstruct any light until the new plumage begins to show through on the surface. Of course, all the birds will not reach this stage just at the same time, and if only a few are much in advance of the bulk of the stock, their cages may be covered a little more closely than usual, in order to allow the rest the benefit of full light until a fair proportion of the stock reach the stage, when it is necessary to tone down the light generally.

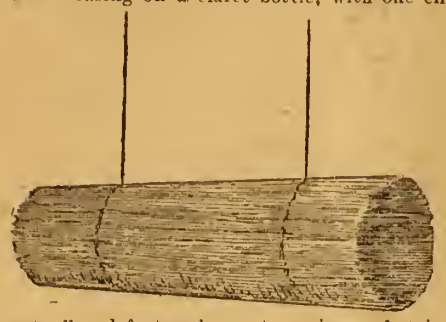
ILLUSTRATED IDEAS



Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

AN EASY SLEEPING PLACE.

Sent by T. Thomson Swancoat, Holywood Co. Down, Ireland.

This is a sketch of a very cosy sleeping or nesting place for small birds. It is the straw casing off a claret bottle, with one end cut off and fastened up; two pieces of string are attached. If it becomes infested with insects another can be procured, as they are very cheap, or a little powder put at the far end.

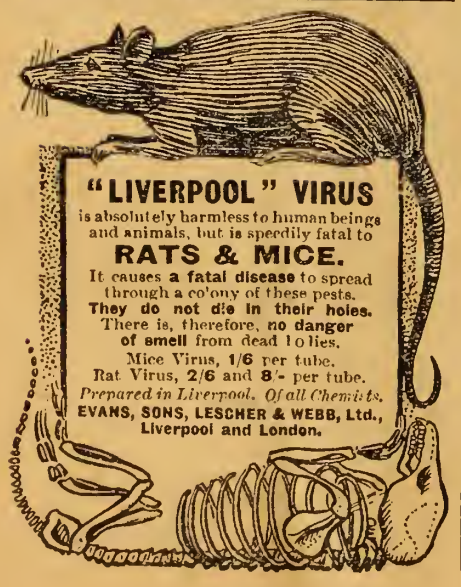
No. 132.



A SEED SAVER.

Sent by B. O. Brett, May Villa, 62, Cantwell road, Plumstead.

I have noticed that my Canaries throw most of their seed outside their cages, and it is often wasted. I have at last developed an idea for saving the seed. I got two pieces of wood, 2½ inches by 2½ inches, and two pieces

4 inches by 2½ inches, and then nailed them together. Having done this, I secured two pieces of stout wire, bent them, and fastened them in the wood, as illustration. The size of this box is only fit for the kind of seed bottle shown in illustration, for other bottles the size varies. I have found that it saves a great deal of seed in one week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB PATRONAGE.

SIR,—Kindly announce that the competition for members of the Y.C.C. outside Yorkshire will be held at Dulwich and Peckham on October 16th and 17th, in place of Accrington, on account of change of dates. Any fancier wishing to join the Y.C.C. should send name and address at once for inclusion in the year book. JOHN GREAVES, Hon. Sec.

THE LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Enamel for Show Cages.

SIR,—I can now supply the correct tint of enamel for inside of Lizard show cages in 6d. and 1s. tins. Azure blue for Gold Lizards and Moss Green for Silver Lizards. Will members who have not paid their subscriptions kindly do so, so that specials for the coming show season can be purchased. Novices will again be specially catered for, so fanciers kindly rally round this Society, the old and original one, and help to make the shows a bigger success. We shall be pleased to furnish you with book of rules and standards on hearing from you. So get enrolled at once. HECTOR OLIVER, Sec.

MORE BIRDY NOTES FROM CANADA.

SIR,—I am herewith forwarding you two photo cards, one of Sea Gulls and one of Herons. If you can reproduce them in CAGE BIRDS I am certain they will be very interesting to a large number of your readers. I might just say that these photos will only give your readers a very meagre idea of the quantity of both Gulls and Herons that abound here, as they only display one group of each, while at the time they were taken you could have taken a hundred different groups similar to those enclosed in less than two miles along this bay. In short, I may say you have to see them before you can half realise the quantities there are of them. [We regret to say that it is impossible to give a reproduction of the photos Mr. Nicholson has so kindly sent us, as they are not sharp enough in detail to come out well.—ED.] Since sending you my former notes I have made a few more observations on bird life on this island (Vancouver). When I wrote my last notes I only mentioned one variety of Swallow; since then I have noticed two other kinds, viz., the small brown-backed Sand Martin; they look a little less than the Old Country Sand Martin, and a little lighter in colour. There is another Swallow nearly as large as a Starling. The cock bird is a rich glossy black all over; the hen has brown back, wings, and tail, and light grey underneath. There is no fear of Mr. Sparrow banishing this bird from his breeding quarters. They build their nests in holes in buildings, the same as Sparrows, and as they did not arrive here until May the Sparrows were in full breeding operation, and had all the holes taken up with their nests; but Mr. Swallow was not long in banishing Mr. Sparrow, and taking possession of his breeding quarters. It was an amusing sight to see them fighting for supremacy, but in two days they cleared about a dozen pairs of Sparrows from one large hotel building, and took possession of their quarters, so this would mean a large death-rate in the Sparrows' homes. There is also a Swift, which arrived here in May. It appears to be the same as the English Swift, but as I have only seen this bird on the wing I cannot say for certain if there is any difference in them. There are also several kinds of small insectivorous birds which have arrived since I sent you my last note. They are mostly of the Fly-catcher tribe, and vary in size from the size of a Nightingale down to the Gold-crested Wren, or even less. Some of them are very beautiful-coloured birds. I have also noticed two different kinds of Wrens. One of them is identical with the Old Country Wren, both in colour and size; the other is nearly as large as a Robin; its colour and habits are identical with the last-named bird. I have also seen a few flocks—about thirty in each flock—of Cedar Waxwings, which were feeding on ripe cherries. I shot one to make sure they were Waxwings, and I wanted to be certain if there was any difference in them and the Bohemian Waxwings, as I once shot one of these at Keswick, in Cumberland, England. The bird I shot here was a cock bird, and to my eye is a good deal smaller than the Bohemian Waxwing, but the same colour, and it had splendid wax tips on the wings. J. NICHOLSON.

It may interest some of your readers to know that on passing down Albert-road yesterday afternoon I noticed, says an Oban correspondent, a Sparrow with a considerable dash of white plumage. Among a group of other Sparrows, it had a decidedly odd appearance. I saw it on the wall between St. John's House and Craig House.

THE SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C. PATRONAGE.

SIR,—In reply to "Yorkie" and Mr. Waterman, I appreciate their points to an extent, but the committee had to consider the recommendation from the annual general meeting that a judge should only judge one show in each section if possible, and also to judiciously spread the patronage over the country; and further, to extend the shows over the season. Last season three shows were supported in October, and one judge was down to judge three shows. The birds will certainly be away for four days, but I believe some fanciers favour two shows in one week, and in this instance most of the birds will be in their owners' hands on the second evening of Battersea Show. I should like to mention that my birds have been away for three days for one show, as I have not received them until very late the night following the closing of the show. They have been handed by the Railway Company to a Parcels Delivery Company for delivery, and how long they are in the draughts in their vans we cannot say, and I consider this more harmful to the birds than four show days. With these remarks I trust "Yorkie" and Mr. Waterman will conclude that the committee have done their best in alloting the patronage.

J. W. RENNIE, Hon. Sec.

SIR,—I would crave a few lines in which to answer your correspondent, John B. Waterman, on the above subject. I would point out that I am in no way antagonistic to Mr. Waterman, knowing him to be an ardent lover of the variety, but as a rule there are always two sides to a question. In the first place, the question does not affect him individually in the slightest degree, seeing that the two shows in question are giving a champion classification, and he is only a novice, and, therefore, would not compete in these classes; and, furthermore, Mr. Waterman has, up to the present, only patronised the club's shows twice, first at the Southern Yorkshire C.C. first feather show, June 30th, 1906, when his exhibit was commended in the first year novice section, and the second time at the L.C.B.A., Westminster, where he was second in the novice classes. Despite Mr. Waterman's assurances he has no axe to grind, there is a veiled innuendo that partiality has been shown, and I would point out what I believe are the true facts. When the voting papers went out for the election of officers, there appeared on the paper several notices of motion, and one stood in the late hon. secretary's name, "That no judge should adjudicate at more than one show where the club's patronage was given." This was, by consent of the members present, withdrawn by Mr. Broome, with a recommendation by Mr. Ramsden that when the allotting of patronage was before the committee, due effect should be given, as far as possible, to Mr. Broome's motion. This was carried unanimously. Seeing that Mr. Mundell is judging at Battersea, it is only feasible the members would, if possible, like the chance of this expert's opinion on their birds. As regards the other South London clubs, I would inform Mr. Waterman that I am of the opinion if one of them had engaged a specialist Yorkshire judge, instead of a Norwich judge, they would have had the patronage also, seeing that at the show in question last year the open Yorkshire classes were the best filled in the show. It does not necessarily follow that the same birds will be shown at Plymouth and Battersea, seeing that Mr. House and Mr. Mundell do not always see eye to eye.

FROST AND SNOW.

THE SCOURGE OF THE BIRD ROOM.

Where do the Red Mite hail from?

SIR,—I have much pleasure in informing you I have found how we obtain most of that great scourge, Red Mite. On calling and pointing it out to Mr. Lewis, secretary of the Llanelly and District C.B.S., and other fanciers, they were surprised, as they have never known such a thing before. I have forwarded two packets of seed for your inspection, which were opened in the presence of Mr. Lewis and friends, and which were purchased fresh for the occasion. If you will kindly inspect the seed in the shade of a bright light at night you will find it all infested with a little white pest. I shall esteem it a favour if you will kindly make it known to your experts, and through your valuable CAGE BIRDS, so that if any other fanciers know of such a thing they will kindly inform us of their opinions. Mr. Lewis has obliged me by saying he will make a special note of this at their next meeting, which I hope to attend to point it out further. I think it will interest many CAGE BIRDS readers to know of this, and it will be a help if they could find out the cause of losing their birds, which I think is fairly due to seed such as this. J. PORTSMOUTH, JUN.

SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

SIR,—Arrangements are now complete for Llanelly to have the novice patronage at their show on January 14, 1908. Mr. J. H. Payne is their judge. In last season's points competition for ladies Mrs. Smith (Acton) is first and Mrs. Vipond Crocker (Penzance) second.

J. W. RENNIE, Hon. Sec.

SUCCESS IN MULE BREEDING.

SIR,—I may say that I have had a fairly good season of Mule breeding, having got 20 Goldfinch Mules and two Linnet Mules from two Finches. I have a dozen of them through the moult, all in outdoor aviary, and doing well, but I have failed to get a light one; there are some with light feathers on their wings. I hope to give you some more particulars on Mule breeding later on.

ADVICE NEEDED.

A Plague of Mice.

SIR,—Will any kind reader of CAGE BIRDS give me an idea how to fasten cages up to a plastered wall? I have this season put two 3 x 1½in. boards across and nailed them to the wall and hung cages on them. Now, through the holes where the nails were driven mice come through in hundreds at night. They come from a bakehouse next door. They swarm into the cages and eat all the seed. You cannot get at them, as they are behind the cages in a second when you go in. Would it stop them to cement the walls? Then I want an idea how to fasten the cages to the wall, not for them to come through. Any suggestion to help me out of this difficulty will be very acceptable, as this season I have lost dozens of young through the mice.

AVALON.

MR. HADWIN ON COLOUR FEEDING.

SIR,—In your issue of August 24th, under above heading, Mr. J. Taylor asks a series of questions which I will try to answer. I am very pleased to note that Mr. Taylor thought my lecture interesting. Re Citrate of Iron and Honey.—Half pint of rum will be sufficient to dissolve the two ounces of iron. Neither the rum or honey in themselves promote colour. The rum is a dissolvent and preservative This particular form of iron in solution quickly turns bad if a preservative is not used. It also acts as a stimulant, and assists the birds through the moult. The honey has a tendency to bloom the feathers, and as birds are very liable to colds when moulting, the rum and honey in conjunction helps them to throw off these colds. These ingredients, by attending to the general health of the birds, assist colour; an unhealthy moult is a bad moult, and especially is it bad from a colour point of view. Re the use of olive oil.—The dry colour food would show a deeper colour if rubbed on the hands, but it would only be a surface colour, easily rubbed off; but if oil is added the colour would be more tenacious, and take a great deal more getting rid of. The principal use of oil is to dissolve the colouring matter of the peppers before being fed to the birds. The colouring matter being dissolved beforehand, allows it to pass more readily into the blood of the birds. It is through the blood that the feathers are fed. I have found that dry peppers given to the birds create a good deal of waste; there does not seem to be sufficient moisture in the birds' stomachs to extract the whole of the colouring matter, hence the waste. It will be easily understood that the less pepper used the better both for the birds and the owner. If the idea is to increase the sale of colour feed, then use it dry, and so use more by at least one-half than if the feed is oiled and the colour dissolved before being fed to the birds. Try this test: Take six teaspoonsful of soft food, add one teaspoonful of dry colour food. Mix well together. Then take six teaspoonsful of soft food, add one teaspoonful of oiled colour food, and mix well together. Both lots of soft food to be of the same making. Then let the mixings speak for themselves. The oil is also useful for putting a gloss on the feathers. Re using too much oil.—It would certainly be easily possible to use too much oil, the proportions given in the report of my lecture will be found sufficient. Oil in large quantities would be too relaxing, but the quantity given will not hurt. I hope Mr. Taylor does not expect me to enter into a controversy with his colour food merchant in respect to this oil question? I am simply stating what, from a long practical experience I have found to be the best method of colour feeding.—Proportions of colour food to egg food: It is always best to measure both the soft food and the colour food. Forty-two teaspoonful of soft food and eight teaspoonsful of colour food would be ample for fifty birds' daily supply. This would be one teaspoonful for each bird daily When the head and neck only is to finish, reduce to half teaspoonful per bird per day, for the first week; quarter teasponful for the second week. By this time the birds should be about finished. If not, continue until finished, and give a teaspoonful once a week all through the show season, so as to keep the birds in bloom.

S. HADWIN.

PROPER TREATMENT OF CHAFFINCHES.

SIR,—Anyone at all conversant with the country will not need to ask what is the meaning or what the application of the term "Pink Pink" is. It is the beautiful Chaffinch. Go where you will throughout the kingdom, to any secluded, cheerless spot you may decide upon, and it is ten to one you will find the Chaffinch. He is met with near every farmstead; he hovers about the gardens of houses in the towns; you hear his "Pink-Pink" if you pass along a lonely country lane; aye, anywhere and everywhere, almost, you come across the Chaffinch—wild, free, and happy. But you meet with the bird also in out-of-the-way places, not free, but in captivity; not happy, but intensely miserable; not joyous, for how can it be so? I wish, with the editor's permission, to refer to this charming bird under both sets of conditions, and to say a word on its behalf in order, if possible, to secure for it happier conditions and more natural food and surroundings, for I know the pages of CAGE BIRDS are read by those who never used to see the fanciers' journals. The scientific name of the Chaffinch most people know, is Fringilla Cœlebs, but that will hardly interest the bulk of those readers I am desirous of influencing. To remember that in its native haunts it feeds so differently to what it is fed by the majority who keep it in captivity will give some idea of the unhappy state in which the bird often exists. It is all very well to say that the Chaffinch becomes accustomed to the different conditions, but that is no adequate reply to the point raised. A man may become accustomed to life in prison, but what is he like when he is worthy to be out? In its wild state the Chaffinch may be found, where opportunity affords, searching, as a well-known and tender-hearted lover of British birds remarks, "all the corners and crevices, looking for and devouring insects of all sorts and sizes, and taking an occasional 'alterative' in the shape of some newly-ripened grain or seeds, of which there are, at different seasons, so many to select from." You see him having a sand bath or a water bath in hot weather. He is not at all shy, and in winter time he comes, with the other birds, to the rear of country and country town dwellings, to partake of the bounties of those who are kind. So much for the bird in its wild state, with the fields for its cage, and the hedgerow, rick, or barn for its shelter. What of the "Pink-Pink" in captivity? In 19 cases out of every 20 does it ever see, or is thought ever taken to procure and supply it, with insect food? Does it ever get—does it enter into the mind of its keepers to seek for ripe seeds and grain food from the hedgerows and the fields? Nay, it gets canary and hemp, hemp and rape, rape and canary, and unsuitable mixture to boot, week in week out. Many do not even give it a supply of what is called "Finch Mixture," put together in packets by those who do know something of the bird's food requirements. Does it ever get, in the homes of the Sunday singing match men, aye, or in the homes of the more refined, any flies, spiders, moths, moth-worms, smooth caterpillars, wasps, wasp-grubs, gentles (or fly maggots); does it ever get even a share of a penny box of ants' eggs? Does it ever get any green food with the blight insect, or little green insect often seen in myriads on a rose bud or other bud? No, it is seed, seed, seed, for ever and ever, and ever. Some days it gets fresh water, some days it does not. To speak of a bath is but to mock at the little prisoner. That it has to take out of its water-tin, through the water hole, and then to drink the water after its difficult ablutions therein, by way of a thirst quencher. It is hardly to be conjectured, allied to the faintest thought of kindliness and regard for decency and humanity, but it is true. And what of the bird's cage? Nine out of ten Chaffinches in captivity are kept in what is called a "back cage," and ignorance, to add to the bird's comfort (sic), often provides a polished one. As if the nature of the wood make the cage space? A "back cage"—yes, about four inches one way by three inches the other—perhaps six inches and four inches—never more. No upper perch, no plentitude of room—like the wild lanes and fields allow—to flap its wings and fly. The kind of "cage" mentioned more often than not the home of the Chaffinch, for ignorance, in its lordly sway, holds that a "back cage" is a "proper" one for a Chaffinch. And ignorance is very bigoted; it is a disease hard to kill. But there is often kindness, of a sort, at the tail of it. Many of the misguided would stand up stout and strong against what they conceived to be illusage to their bird. And what of its surroundings, i.e., the atmosphere in which the bird is often kept. Sometimes, aye, and perhaps very often, it is kept by night and by day in a "back cage," covered right up with a handkerchief in a hot and stuffy room, or a smoky tap-room, above the gas level, to be hung out at the window on a bleak day, if the sun happens to be shining! But—and here is a great "but"—even from its circumscribed prison it cannot see the beautiful sunlight or look up into that blue sky beneath the canopy of which it used, in other days, to fly at will! And yet ignorance is kind, after a fashion, and loves its birds, after a fashion, too. Ignorance is proof against common-sense, for that latter commodity never enters the door where ignorance dwells. It seems to me that the same ruling power that has passed a Wild Birds' Protection Act should take steps to pass a Captive Birds' Protection Act also. No bird, of any kind, should be kept in captivity unless it was provided with reasonable cage room, and steps were taken to supply it with its natural food. How would I accomplish this? I would fine anyone who sold or offered for sale a cage of less than a given measurement, and I would mete out the same punishment to anyone found keeping a bird therein, giving to any inhabitant—just as with cruelty to animals—the power to lay an information against offenders. Just a word in description of a Chaffinch as required by the exhibiting fancier. He seeks for a bird with a broad head, thick body at shoulder and chest, and bold neck. The body must taper off well towards the tail, plumage tight, sleek, and glossy; wings well and levelly carried, tail nicely folded and clean at rump and roots, i.e., free from slackness at thighs and root of tail, clean and distinct in colours, abundance of sheen to add beauty to the grand metallic shades of the bird's plumage, the white bars on the wings, and any other white parts to be pure in colour, the bird to be very active and very glossy in feather. I like, also, to see the bird set up his head feathers, crest-like, for it adds to his vivacity and is pleasing to note. Some men colour feed, or, to be more explicit, give colour-enhancing food (as they think) during moult to exhibition specimens. But the natural colours of the bird are beautiful enough to need no artificial enhancemnt. "Beauty unadorned is adorned the most." For the sake of the beautiful "Pink-Pink," and perhaps as a final plea to the many (I am convinced kind-hearted but mistaken) people who keep it in captivity, I will describe a suitable cage in which to keep the Chaffinch. You want one at least 15 inches long by 12 inches high, and 8 inches from back to front. If you can afford room for one longer, so much the better. Let the door be such as to allow you to insert a bath, which should be removed as soon as the bird has used it, and plenty of dry sand placed in the sand drawer. Clean the perches weekly, and give the bird fresh water and food daily, taking care to remove all stale bits and blow the dust and seed husks from the seed vessels. Study the insect and fruit foods mentioned in a previous part of these notes, and endeavour to obtain some. If you cannot get all these, you can obtain ants' eggs, and you can also obtain a sweet apple or a ripe banana, or even a dried currant (shop), and give "Pink-Pink" a meal and a treat. If you love your bird, study these points, for pity's sake. Remember what you have deprived it of for your own pleasure. If you do not love it, you are not a manly man to keep it. Take it into the fields at once, if it be summer time, open the cage door, and let it fly. If you keep it, be a man or a woman, and nurture it. It will sing to you its glad thanks.

"ON THE WATCH TOWER."

TONYPANDY AWAKE!

An Appeal to Fanciers of the District.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make an appeal, through the agency of your columns, on behalf of the Tonypandy and District Cage Bird Society? Knowing that there are a considerable number of fanciers in and around the district, I venture to ask, would it not be possible to restart the Society again? It has suspended its meetings only a matter of a few months. I would be pleased to hear from any fancier in Mid-Rhondda regarding it. H. JELLEY.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND NON-UNION SHOWS.

SIR,—Would the secretary of the Cage Bird Union kindly inform me if a member of the above Society is eligible to compete for prizes at a non-union show, in next week's CAGE BIRDS. At Weston, near Bath, a show was held on August 1st, when three members of the Cage Bird Union were exhibiting, viz., Mr. T. Taylor and Messrs. Andrews and Biss, of Bath. The first-named exhibited three, winning first; Messrs. Andrews and Biss exhibited two, winning second; and myself winning third with one exhibit. The above show was not under the Cage Bird Union rules. I am given to understand that the Cage Bird Union has a rule as follows: that a member of the above is not eligible to compete at a non-union show. I wrote to the Bristol Cage Bird Society secretary, and informed him of the above affair, and I am depending on him to bring the matter forward to his members at their next general meeting. I should be pleased with the opinions of other members of the Cage Bird Union. C. CRANE.

A COLOUR FEEDING TIP.

How to be Happy at the Seaside.

SIR,—Fanciers are only human. Many, I have little doubt, like to get away for a holiday, and now that August is well in, and colour feeding is general, it is rather an inconvenient time to leave our feathered friends even if only for a week-end, as colour food given in the ordinary way with boiled egg will not keep for any length of time, the egg invariably turning sour. I have used the following means for the past two years, and intend doing so again this year, as the colour comes out in every detail just as good as with the usual method. I make a loaf from the following:—1lb. flour, ½oz. baking powder, ½oz. ground linseed, 6ozs. castor sugar, 10 eggs, 4ozs. mutton suet. Mix well the flour, baking powder, and linseed, beat up the eggs and sugar very well, and mix with the flour, etc.; render the suet very slowly and add to the others. Mix all together thoroughly, and be able to rub all lumps out before putting into a greased loaf tin. Bake in a slow oven. I generally let the cake stand for about four days until stale, and then grate it very fine. If stored in air-tight tins it will keep good for a long time, I myself having kept it for two months. The colour food can be mixed in the usual manner that is adopted when mixing the egg and biscuit, but much larger quantities can be mixed at a time; I generally mix enough to last a fortnight or three weeks. When mixing do not add sugar, as there is sufficient in the cake. Any fancier using this method, if he mixes sufficient to last until he returns, need not feel anxious whilst inhaling the briny breezes. There will be no chance that the person he has left at home to care for his birds will mix the colour food in a different manner, say stronger or weaker than he has been accustomed to do, thus being the means of putting the birds off eating it, and thereby undoing what has been accomplished by all the time, study, and patience which one has given them previously. It is most essential to start with the above cake a week at the very least before leaving them in the care of another person, so that you can get the birds properly on to it, a very easy matter, as they relish it just as much as the boiled egg and bread crumb or biscuit. If not for colour feeding this cake is an excellent substitute for egg food.

WHOLESALE DEATHS.

The Value of Disinfection.

SIR,—Allow me through your columns to express sympathy for the Reader of CAGE BIRDS who has been so very unfortunate as to lose 110 birds, which we are informed were his whole stock. Surely there is some mistake about the cause of their death, except we assume that the water supplied was contaminated? Some time ago, in a contemporary, I noticed a correspondent attributing the large death rate among freshly-caught birds to excessive drinking of water, so that the idea, though certainly erroneous, seems not to be uncommon. A little reflection ought to convince intelligent readers that a bird in good health, and with fair accommodation, could have no motive for drinking more water than was beneficial, and even if it did take more than was necessary to its well-being, it would succeed in killing itself in 24 hours. The increased drinking, instead of being the cause of death, is an attempt to compensate for the excessive loss of fluid from the bowel, and is beneficial, inasmuch as it assists in the elimination of the poison from the body of the sufferer. The scourge which is responsible for the death of so many birds is an infectious disease which, having broken out in a bird-room, is apt to spread from one bird to another until the whole stock is affected and perishes. Your correspondent's second stock was in all likelihood attacked, because disinfection of his room and cages had been imperfectly performed, or the disease may have been re-introduced with the second lot of birds. If he has not utterly lost heart, and I trust he hasn't, he ought to seek the advice and, if possible, the co-operation of someone who is thoroughly conversant with the details of disinfection, i.e., the local sanitary inspector; and having rigidly followed his instructions, cautiously re-stock his room, beginning with one or two birds at a time. After enough time has elapsed to convince him that the disease is eradicated, he can gradually increase his stock, isolating newly-acquired specimens if he has any doubt as to the purity of the source from which they are obtained. Attention to minute disinfection and the placing of doubtful birds in quarantine is perhaps a little wearisome, but it carries its own reward, and will ensure the success which sympathetic readers of CAGE BIRDS trust may crown his efforts. THE PROPOSED LONDON FEDERATION OF C.B.S.

SIR,—In your issue of the 17th, you have a paragraph re the proposed London Federation. The scheme outlined therein is, in my opinion, too ambitious for a start. True, enquiries have been made, but there the matter ends for the present. Any scheme, in my judgment, ought to come through the Federated Societies, and, when agreed upon by the representative meeting, must be submitted to all societies for amendment and final adoption. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the interest taken in this question. A. C. BURN.

MR. MADDISON'S LIGHT MULES.

How Does he Breed Them?

SIR,—Having read with much interest some of the letters appearing in the columns of your valuable paper anent the breeding of light Mules, I wonder if it would be asking too much of Mr. Maddison, of Newcastle, to let me know, through the columns of CAGE BIRDS, what sort of Goldfinches he breed his light Mules off, and if he has a special breed of Canaries for breeding same? I am one many of your readers are, like myself, anxious to know, as light Mules are few and far between. JNO. KILPATRICK.

BORDER BREEDING RESULTS.

SIR,—I hear that Messrs. Arnot and Jamieson, of Hawick, after a disastrous commencement, have bred over 100, among them an eye-opener in the shape of a Cinnamon evenmark, also some grand greens. Mr. J. H. Bennett, the well-known Kelso breeder of this variety, has also over 100 doing well, being exceptionally strong in yellow cocks. Mr. Brockie, of Earlston, from eight pairs has bred 80, some grand ones among them, principally clears and fouls. He has a good yellow cock, a charming yellow hen, a good buff hen, and a champion yellow foul. He says his last year's champion will just need to remain on the shelf this season, as he has a grand team. J. W. BRUCE.

THE WHITE SWALLOW AT LEARMOUTH.

SIR,—I may say the Albino Swallow I mentioned in last week's CAGE BIRDS has fallen a victim to the gun, but I have been fortunate in securing it. There is not a dark feather on it, and it is a youngster, the tail being scarcely full grown. It is in grand order, and I am having it preserved. It was shot about two miles from where I noticed it.

Habits, Structure, and Colouration of Birds.

By J. W. CUTMORE (Taxidermist to the Liverpool Museum).

A Lecture delivered before the Manchester and Northern Counties Ornithological Society.

Why are not all societies for the study of birds given the title of Ornithological? There are certainly degrees in the study, but the difference, I think, does not lie in the direction considered by some people that is, that a man who studies living birds is a bird fancier, while he who studies dead skins is an ornithologist. There is plenty of scope for the student of living birds, even in captivity. As an example, cage a Nightjar, watch his habits and try to discover what use he makes of the comb at the end of his middle toes; there is not an ornithologist at the present time who can give you this information with any degree of certainty. My own opinion is that the bird uses these two little combs to scrape and polish those long stiff bristles on each side of its gape, when soiled, but there is no evidence to support this theory.

CLASSIFICATION OF BIRDS.

Birds are classed according to their structure and mode of life, into orders, sub-orders, families, sub-families, genera, species and sometimes into sub-species; as an example the Song Thrush is a member of the order.

Passeriformes .....Perching Birds
Section A—Acromyodi .....Singing Birds
Sub-order—Turdiformes .....Thrush-like Group 2—Cichlomorphæ— — —
Thrush-like Passeres
Family—Turdidæ .....True Thrushes
Sub-family—Turdinæ .....Thrushes
Genera—Turdus Species—Musicus

This may not appear encouraging for a beginner, but it is really very simple when one becomes accustomed to the use of technical terms.

One of the first questions that suggests itself to us concerning a bird, is, what is the cause of its wonderful vitality? How it is that such a tiny thing as a Goldcrest can cross an ocean, flying thousands of miles in one journey? To begin with, a bird has a good appetite, to speak of an animal as an engine, the supply must be large and constant if much work is to be done. Little appetite, little energy, is a rule that holds throughout nature. The large appetite of a bird is to be looked upon as a proof of strength and energy. Of course, the appetite alone without proportionate digestive power, would be worse than useless. The apparatus of digestion must be first-rate.

THE CROP DESCRIBED.

In all birds the gullet (œsophagus) is large, in many, especially seed-eaters, it opens out into a great expansion with thickened walls, called the crop, which reaches a high development in the pigeon. The crop secrets no special digestive fluid, it is mainly a store-house in which food is kept till the stomach is ready to deal with it, still it must not be supposed that the food which passes from the crop is in the same condition as that which enters it. During its stay there it is acted on by the saliva (which is small in a bird in comparison with man), also by water taken, and by the watery fluid (secretion) of the mucous membrane, and the warmth of the body. The crop is not nearly so much developed in birds of prey, yet in some of them it has been found equal to hard work. In owls, for instance, the construction of the walls strips the fur, etc., off their prey, after the skin has been weakened by the secretions as is shown by the well-known pellets of fur, feathers and bones thrown up after a meal. In some birds the crop is altogether wanting. From the crop the food passes on to the second compartment, the stomach.

HOW THE STOMACH ASSIMILATES FOOD.

The stomach of a bird has two compartments very different in structure and function. There is the fore part (proventriculus) which is highly glandular, and the hinder part, which have no glands, and to which when it is very muscular, as in the bird before us, the name gizzard is given. The proventriculus secretes strong acid juices from its glands, and some kinds of food such as meat may probably be partly absorbed here, the peptone, as it is called, that is formed from them passing into the blood vessels, that are separated only by a very thin membrane from the cavity of the stomach. When the food has penetrated into the blood vessels, it is no longer a foreign substance, but having been thoroughly assimilated, has become part of the bird itself. As a rule, however, the process of assimilation is not completed in the first part (proventriculus), the food passes on to the second compartment of the stomach, the walls of which, in seed-eaters, are very thick and strong; stones are swallowed to aid in the process of grinding up the food. In soft billed birds the walls of the stomach are weak, it is not a gizzard in the fullest sense, and no stones are swallowed. The food passes from the gizzard to the smaller intestine, where the process of digestion is completed. The duodenum is the first part of the smaller intestines, a U shaped loop, and in it lies a whitish gland (the pancreas). The liver is another gland of larger size, these pour upon the food in the duodenum the juices of digestion. The pancreatic juices converting the starch into sugar, and the bile emulsifying the fats. When the bile and pancreatic juices have together done their work, the process of digestion is complete.

THE BLOOD AND ITS WORK.

Only through the agency of the blood can food and air make up for the wear and tear of the body. The heart is the force pump that drives the blood to all parts of the body, and when it returns impure and loaded with used up material, sends it to the lungs to be purified. On the voyage much of the blood passes through the kidneys, which assists the lungs to expel the waste. In man, three organs divide between them this work: the skin, lungs, and kidneys; but in birds the skin is not an excretory organ. The kidneys are very active in excreting urea and uric acid. In birds, it is in a nearly solid form, as is noticed by its whiteness in the bird's droppings. The lungs alone have the duty of getting rid of superfluous water, this suggests how necessary it is that birds should have plenty of fresh air.

THE BREATHING APPARATUS.

In birds the lungs are small and less elastic than in man, but are aided by a series of air sacs (easily seen in a dead bird carefully dissected; by blowing down the windpipe they become inflated). By the help of these a bird can get through more work in proportion to its size than a man. For the many lung troubles in cage birds there seems to be no permanent cure, and to prevent them we must have pure air in our bird rooms, and the birds must have plenty of flight room for exercise.

Mr. F. COLLINS, of Camborne, a well-known face at Cornish Shows.

Placing growing plants in the room has two good qualities to recommend it, firstly, to enliven and freshen the general appearance; secondly, to give that exchange of gases, absorbing the carbonic acid gas given off by the birds, and giving off the oxygen necessary for the birds — a very beneficial exchange. Few people recognise the value of pure air, most are afraid of it, as if it were a poisonous gas. Pure air is our best friend, be it warm or cold; we cannot have too much of it. The animal system constantly demands it for the maintenance of heat, for the oxidation or burning up of waste and for general use all over the body. It is proved that pure air is even more necessary for young life than for adult; many young birds and fresh-caught wild birds die from the lack of fresh air and flight room.

ILL-EFFECTS OF CONFINEMENT.

Just think for a moment what it must be for a bird of the air to be shut up in a badly ventilated room. It is bad enough for a man of the field, but for a bird that is accustomed to dart across oceans and continents, to be cooped, cribbed and confined in a box twelve inches square in a stuffy room is diabolical cruelty, and most of our bird rooms are stuffy; this is my experience. Some men give up the use of flight cages, because they believe that the wind from the birds' wings in flying about give each other colds. A few summers ago I visited with a friend the great sanatorium city of Davos, in the Swiss Alps. There I found they treated consumptives entirely with pure air night and day. No medicines of any kind; good, plain, nourishing food, plenty of sleep, and no closed windows. When visiting the Island of Sokotra in the Indian ocean, we took with us several servants and an escort, among them an Indian Sowar, who kept me awake at night with his consumptive-like coughing which he had contracted in barracks; but after a short stay under canvas on the open plains of Hadibu, he entirely recovered, although the place was a hot-bed of malaria. I have had much better luck with British birds outside than indoors. A Yorkshire canary hen had suffered for over a year from lung trouble, but recovered in six weeks by the outdoor treatment. We must pass on now to the colour of birds.

COLOURATION AND ITS USES.

Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace was the first to suggest that the white underside of the rabbit's tail acted as a signal or warning in case of danger, etc. Amongst birds we find they all have a recognition note or call-note. Notice a flock of small birds; they are continually on the chatter. The twitterings keep the scattered birds in touch with their companions. Colour markings also serve a similar purpose during flight, when the wings are expanded, and their distinct colours displayed, a most casual glance will leave no doubt as to their identity; for instance, the greenfinch with his bright yellow wing-bands; the chaffinch with its black and white effect; the goldfinch with its mixture of black, white and gold; the green woodpecker, its golden yellow rump patch; the redstart with its chestnut tail; the wheatear with its white rump patch; and the bullfinch also, are good typical examples. These patches are scarcely discernible, and in some species completely covered when the bird is feeding or at rest, but disclosed at once when disturbed. Notice the white rumps of most wading and water birds, particularly the petrels. There can be no doubt that these white patches on dark birds displayed behind are of the greatest service in revealing the bird's whereabouts to its companions, amidst the waste of waters and the nightly gloom.

How I Bred my Winning Canaries.

Some Reminiscences of an Old-time Fancier.

By JOHN B. WATERMAN.

A Few Hints to Beginners.

Kindly permit me to tender you my very best thanks for publishing on the front page of CAGE BIRDS a drawing of two of my Yorkshire Canaries, winners of first and second prizes at the recent Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. Young Bird Show. The sketch so very pleasingly depicted is a life-like picture of the birds, and the work reflects the greatest credit upon your clever artist-in-chief, Mr. Henry Norman, whose name is a household word in the bird world.

A WINNING QUARTETTE.

The birds represented are out of a nest of four, the other two winning me first and second prizes at the Deptford C.B.S. Nest Feather Show. The sire of the quartette is a slightly-ticked yellow, who last autumn won me the L. and P.O.S. Novice Championship Diploma and Medal and other good prizes. The mother is a wing-ticked buff, which I bought from one of the best breeders in Yorkshire. She comes of distinguished parentage, her father having won first at the Crystal Palace in 1906, and special for best bird in the show at Hartlepool and Morecambe. Her mother similarly distinguished herself, so that this combination should, although like does not always produce like, especially with birds, produce something good. If it would not occupy too much of your valuable space, Mr. Editor, I will endeavour to explain for the information of the beginner (the old 'uns know quite enough) exactly how I bred my birds, and how the small measure of success which has so far attended my efforts was achieved, in the hope that the few hints may possibly prove of some practical use to them, and furthermore, that the information may act as an incentive to those young bird lovers who are always standing just on the brink of the fancy to come right into the fold.

THE AMATEUR STATUS.

While on the subject of the beginner, I should like to say there is one thing I think should be done, and that is, the Novice Status very considerably broadened. There should, I think, be one novice rule throughout the fancy, and in my opinion, a man should retain his novitiate for at least two years after winning his initial first prize. He should then go up one step higher to the Amateur Section, and should remain therein one year from winning his first "first," and then he should become a full blown champion. I feel certain that some such arrangement as this would very materially strengthen the fancy, inasmuch as it would possibly induce a great number of those who take up the hobby of bird breeding and exhibiting, to stick to it longer than they do under the existing arrangement. Some novices are fortunate enough to win two or three first prizes in one season, and then they are straightaway pitchforked into the Champion Section before they have had time to feel their feet, so to speak, with the result that they cannot possibly compete successfully with their more experienced fellows, and the inevitable sequel is they in a great number of cases leave the fancy in disgust. Take the great National Show at the Crystal Palace, for instance, I would ask, what earthly chance has the one-season man alluded to above got against such giant exhibitors as Bailey and Swanger, Amblers, Shackleton, Mackley Bros. and others I could mention? Why, the very idea is preposterous. Whereas, if there were a middle or amateur class, the small man would be given a chance, and the authorities would no doubt secure a largely augmented entry.

THE JOY OF WINNING.

But this is a digression, and as a breezy turfite once said, "Cut your cackle and come to the 'osses." Well, I would recall that last year you did me the honour to print in CAGE BIRDS a short article on the subject of my experiences as a fancier, wherein I endeavoured to trace my connection with our feathered pets from that time, alas! now more years ago than I care to remember, when my sole birdy possession consisted of a merry little linnet, which cost me the huge sum of sixpence in "The Row," down to last October, when I was fortunate enough to capture the diploma and medal mentioned above. It would be impossible for me to describe the feeling of joy which possessed me on that memorable night at Camberwell and I am quite sure my delight must have been tantamount to that felt by the sportsman upon seeing his steed gallop first past the winning post for the Derby. It was indeed a "Blue Riband" honour to me, especially in view of the fact that the victorious bird had a few weeks prior to the show been much below par, and that I had carefully nursed it back to health and vigour. That success encouraged me to take up exhibiting upon a much larger scale than heretofore, as I felt certain that with dogged perseverance and patience, the highest honours of the show bench were within the reach of all who cared to put forth the necessary effort.

A NOTE FOR THE OLD HANDS.

Young fanciers, nowadays, with such an excellent paper as CAGE BIRDS at their command, have every facility afforded them of proving successful in the hobby, but many would like to see more of the old and seasoned hands a little more communicative than they sometimes are, as I feel sure if they would only give the novices a helping hand in the shape of an occasional article in these columns, a large number of budding young enthusiasts would be induced to take up the delightful and ennobling hobby of bird-keeping and breeding, and thus the fancy would be very appreciably strengthened. This could but operate for the benefit of everybody, as it might not only lead to bigger entries at our shows, and hence better prize money, but there would naturally be a healthier market created for the disposal of surplus stock. Now you old 'uns come on and let us know publicly something about those "wrinkles" you are all supposed to be the proud possessors of.

PALACE WINNERS AND THEIR VALUE.

Beginners, however, must at once be told not to expect to 'secure "Palace winners" at the small prices one often sees quoted. In this respect, I may say, I have received numerous applications for birds, many of the would-be purchasers living in very remote parts, and some of the epistles really make one smile. One genius wrote, "Can you sell me a nice Yorkshire bird, one that can win. I don't mind paying a fair price for a really good specimen, say 5s. 6d. or 6s. 6d.—I have seen such birds quoted at much less than this. You would, of course, let me have the bird on approval." This is a fair sample of the other letters. Of course, the writers are not always to blame, the fault rests mainly with those persons who quote what are termed winners at such ridiculously low figures. Novices should be warned not to take the bait, which is laid only to trap the inexperienced and unwary, but to write to, or see a reputable breeder of the particular variety they wish to take up, telling him exactly what they want, and how much money they are prepared to pay. The names and addresses of most of the leading fanciers will be found in that excellent work, "Cage Birds Annual," which no lover of birds should be without.

A STATE OF INDECISION.

When first I made up my mind to take up exhibition stock, I was a long time before I could decide which variety to go in for, for there are so many and they are all very beautiful. Some three decades ago the most popular varieties of the canary were:—The London Fancy, the Norwich, the Belgian, the Lizard, the Yorkshire, the Green, the Cinnamon, the Manchester Coppy, the Turnerest, the Quaker, the German, the Glasgow Don, the Jonque, and Mealy. Many of these have now become practically extinct, while such as the Norwich, Yorkshire, Crests, and Green, are nowadays far more elegant birds than those of the time of which I speak. One of the most remarkable varieties ever known was a pink bird, which is said to have been held in great esteem by the beautiful Marie Antoinette, and it would be interesting to see one of these birds on the show bench nowadays.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Wild Plants for Cage Birds.

Weeds and Seeds of the Field and Wayside described.

By R. MORSE.

With Footnotes, etc., by G. E. Weston.

The Marsh Plume-Thistle (Cnicus palustris).

The Marsh Plume-Thistle is a near relative of the species last described, and is almost equally abundant. It delights, as its name indicates, to grow about damp, boggy, meadows and hedgerows, and such like places. It is amongst the tallest of our native thistles, sometimes reaching a height of 9ft. or even 10ft. The stem, which is only branched near the summit, is stout and hollow, and "winged" from bottom to top in a similar manner to the Spear Plume-Thistle.

The flower-heads are small, placed in leafy clusters at the ends of the flower-stalks, and are egg-shaped. They are of a deep crimson colour, and may sometimes be found white. The flowering season lasts from July to September. The whole plant has a somewhat brownish appearance, and may readily be distinguished from other species of Thistles by the description given above.

The seeds of the Marsh Plume-Thistle are also very valuable as a food for cage-birds, and may easily be gathered in abundance in most marsh spots during late autumn.

PLAINTAIN.

The seeds of the plantain seem to be very generally liked by seed-eating birds, and I have never heard of any ill-effect being attributed to the using of them. Many fanciers hold they are of particular value to moulting birds; certainly they then afford an agreeable variation in the diet, when such is of more than ordinary value. Many knowing Linnet fanciers are sweet on plantain as a moulting food for their birds, holding that the seeds bring out the plumage to perfection. They say it has a slightly constipating effect, and is thus excellent to use when giving linseed freely—linseed being an indispensable item with Linnets. Plantain seed has the merit of being exceedingly easy to obtain and store for use. The greater plantain, I may add, is also commonly known as "Rat's-tails."—G.E.W.

There are in this country five common species of plantain, and, of these, two species are very useful to those who keep caged birds. I shall accordingly give descriptions and illustrations of these two plantains, which are both exceedingly plentiful in almost all parts of the country.

Greater Plantain (Plantago Major).

The larger of the two is that which is commonly known as Way-bread, or Greater Plantain. The leaves of this plant all grow from the base of the stem, and the leaf-stalks have a deep groove or channel along their upper side. On the under side of each leaf will be found from three to seven very prominent ribs, and when the leaf is picked there will probably be four or five long fibres hanging from the broken end of the leaf-stalk.

The flowers are produced in a very long tapering spike, on a comparatively short stalk, the former often being considerably longer than the latter, which is cylindrical in shape. This plant is very abundant by most waysides, and on the borders of fields, and its flowering season lasts from May till September.

Leaf of Greater Plantain.
(Plantago Major) reduced.

Ribwort Plantain (Plantago Lanceolata).

The other useful species of plantain (which is equally common, but grows chiefly in meadows), is the Ribwort Plantain. The leaves of this variety are of quite a different shape, as will be seen from the illustrations. The flower heads likewise differ very much from those of the Greater Plantain, being quite short and almost egg-shaped in some cases.

Ribwort Plantain.
(Plantago Lanceolata.)

The flower-stalks also differ, for instead of being short and cylindrical, as in the other species described, they are long and angular. It may be found in bloom from May till October, and its seeds may be gathered in abundance during late summer and early autumn.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Birds Among the Corn.

It does not need the chill air of the early morning to remind us that the season is rapidly changing. We have only to glance across the landscape and note the havoc the farmers' men are making with the standing corn. The view is rapidly changing. Each bared field reminds us of coming winter, and although the hedgerows are still beautiful with flowers and berries; we look upon the latter as so much store for the feathered race in time of stress. It is with mixed feelings wild birds must view the cutting of the corn. Many coveys of partridges have literally been driven from house and home; they were hatched and reared in the field now denuded of cover, and the whole family wander aimlessly about the lanes and cart tracks, finally settling among the turnips or the fields of potatoes, from whence, within a few days, they will run the gauntlet, which is the lot of all game birds. Up to the present time the Wood Pigeons have not done much harm to the grain; they have been content to forage among the stalks for the food scattered by the hordes of Sparrows, or to feed off the ears broken down by these little marauders; but now it is different—they descend in huge flocks, settling upon the shocks, and feast as only a pigeon can; they will eat two or three hundred grains at a meal, and come again for another during the day. A bushel or two of good wheat is soon devoured by a big flock of these birds. They have increased amazingly, and a flock of fifty to a hundred is a common sight in some of the wooded districts in the South.

A sign of the season is the collecting of the pretty Turtle Doves, birds of rapid flight, with tails tipped with white, which are plainly seen as they settle, for they spread them to their fullest extent. From now until some time next month these birds will live in the harvest fields. During the summer they have been one of the best friends of the farmer, for they have lived chiefly upon a weed with a pinkish flower, called by the country people "beauty-wash." In some places this grows abundantly, and is one of the most difficult weeds to deal with. Now they have changed their diet, and will feed with the Wood Pigeons until the time comes for them to make the southern journey to Northern Africa. To anyone accustomed to the open fields, and watching these birds fly about either singly or in pairs during the summer, it is a grand sight to see them now in huge flocks, and these increasing in size rapidly. If one should happen to be in a favoured locality, one can watch them daily, for they roam the same fields day after day, when suddenly some morning they will be missed, and only a stray bird or two left of the big gathering.

Another sign of the coming movement is the massing of the Swallows and Martins. In the evening is the time to see them, for they are then all activity and life, rushing about hither and thither, occasionally roaming far from the village across the meadows and corn fields, for here food is abundant, insects in hundreds lurk among the golden shocks, and the dusky Swifts will be there busy gliding among them, long after the farmers' men have quitted the field, so late do they remain out upon the wing that one sometimes wonders if they ever rest.

Along the hedgerows the warblers may be seen in numbers, staying for a few hours during their journey to the South. Some of these we do not recognise, for they are the immature birds of the year, and can only be identified by handling. A brownish bird flies down the lane before us; as he turns we get a glint of bright red at the tail, and know the Redstart is about. Whitethroats and yellowish-green Willow Warblers creep in and out the hedge, only staying long enough in sight to be identified. Soon the hedgerows will be tenanted by the Sparrows and Finches only.

The Shoveller Duck.

The Shoveller is thought by some to be a very rare species. This is not the case, for this interesting bird is fairly common in several counties in England, besides Wales and Scotland, even as far North as the Orkneys. It is certainly increasing around the Fens, and upon the Broads of Norfolk, and some parts of Kent it is as common as any species. The nest is placed in a variety of situations. Among those that have come under notice this season one was found upon swampy ground, and another high and dry, among the heather, upon a Sussex Common, two quite dissimiliar situations. The material used in building the nest is very scanty, a little dry grass and leaves, whilst down and small feathers are used for the lining. The eggs are white, with a greenish tinge; they vary considerably in number; the average would be about ten.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

PARROT PROBLEM

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all chargo to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained en the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

I DON'T ASK

anyone to purchase a single thing from me unless they have it on trial, and see what they are getting for their money, and for that reason I send everything on approval, either on receipt of cash or "Cage Birds" deposit system, and money is refunded in full if perfect satisfaction not given. Clap nets, made from real flax thread, ¾in. mesh, 3yds. long, 4ft. deep, 4/ pair, 4yds. 5/-; 5yds. 6/-; 6yds. 7/-; 7yds. 8/-; 8yds. 9/-; 9yds. 10/-; 10yds. 11/- per pair, all 4ft. deep, and fitted complete with pure hemp lines, beech stave poles, ash pegs, and all necessories, ready for immediate work; bat folding sparrow nets, fitted on 19ft. bamboo poles, 6/6 pair; self-acting spring net traps, 18in. long, 9d. each; 24in., 1/- each. These traps are by far the largest and best traps on market, will catch and hold uninjured any bird from a Wren to a Rook; can be set anywhere by a child, and cannot get out of order; nearly 2,000 sold last season. Single trap cages 6d. each, 4/6 doz.; double ditto, 10d. and 1/- each; 7/6 and 9/- dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each; 12/- dozen; all have separate compartment for call bird. Patent self-setting and self-acting trap cage, works automatically, 1/6 each; real Japanese Bird Lime, absolutely strongest made, guaranteed to hold birds even in the rain, and only lime to stand all weathers, ¼lb. 6d.; ½lb., 10d.; 1lb., 1/6; sample, 3d.; all post free; loose netting for all kinds bird nets, real Irish Thread, ¾in. mesh, 7ft. deep 3d. yd.; 9 ft. deep, 4d. yd.; 12 ft. deep, 5d. yd., post free. This netting must not be confused with the thick American cotton netting now being sold as bird netting; mine is exceedingly fine, but very strong, and will not show on ground. Pure hemp pull lines, 65yds. long, strong as boat lines, 1/4 each post free. Everything required by catchers in stock; please send stamp for full list and sample of netting. Round or square topped call cages, 3d. each; 2/6 doz.; 27/- gross. Linnet or Goldfinch cages, 6d. each, 4/6 doz. Lark runner cages, 3/6, 4/-, and 5/- dozen; singing box cages, 10d., 1/-, and 1/3 each; 8/-, 10/ and 12/- dozen. Cottage topped Thrush or Blackbird cages, 2/6 and 3/- each. Full trade list of sizes, and prices of cages, one stamp. Following received to-day:—"Cross-st., Cheslyn, Hay, Aug. 18th.—Sir,—Please send 4yds. loose netting; it is very cheap; no one would believe how good and strong it is for the money, but I know, as I had some last year, and it is as good as ever it was. —Yours, Charles Perks." "33, Harboro' Park, Rushden.—Sir,—Please send 18yds. netting. The netting I had from you two years ago is as good as ever.—Yours, J. Robinson." "Bright View, Old Rattray, nr. Blairgowrie, Aug. 19th.—Sir,—Please send 1lb. of your bird lime. I got some of your lime last year, and it is the best I ever used for standing all weathers. I caught Crows and Jackdaws on it." Scores of similar letters constantly arriving and open to inspection. All my catching appliances are made by men who are not only practical net makers, but bird catchers as well, and so know from actual experience exactly what is required for the purpose. All leading catchers swear by my nets, and will use no others. I cordially invite comparison with any others on the market, and my prices defy competition. One trial is all I ask, and result will please me.

HYGIENE OF BIRD KEEPING.
By W. GEO. CRESWELL, M.D., L.R.C.P., F.Z.S.
Price 1/1, post free from CAGE BIRDS Offices,
154, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
LANCET: "This little book will be welcomed by all lovers of birds, whether ornithologists, aviculturists, or the owners of a single pet songster. The author deals with his subject in a thoroughly practical and scientific manner, and the results of his experiments prove the fallacy of some rule-of-thumb theories. . . . The book is well illustrated."
COUNTRY LIFE: " . . . a surprising amount of really valuable advice for all who keep small birds, whether in cages or aviaries. . . . Those who approach the subject with an open mind must admit the cogency of the author's arguments; and these, backed by a very wide experience at first hand, will prove hard nuts to crack for many of the champions of the 'good old methods.' . . . We venture to think that his experience will pave the way for a revolution in the methods of bird keeping in the near future."

MEDICINES.

FLETCHER'S celebrated Asthma Cure. This noted remedy requires No Puff, only trying, 7d. bottle, post free.—W. Fletcher, Heathfield-avenue, Dover.

THOSE fanciers who wish to keep their birds from chills and inflammation during the moult should write for a bottle of Tussiline. A few drops in the drinking water will prevent illness and bring about a quick and healthy moult. Mr. Sutton, of Southport, writes—"Send large bottle of your valuable Tussiline." Mr. Johnson, also of Southport, says: — "Your Tussiline has worked wonders; send large bottle." Tussiline is sold in bottles, 7d., 1/-, 2/-.—J. Palmer, Chemist, Gamlingay.

COAL TAR EXTRACT
or Alcoholic Solution of Coal Tar, for colds, asthma, etc., 7d. per bottle, or three bottles 1/6 free, with printed advice.—Manufactured by Joseph Huggard, Mount-st., Mullingar. Wholesale and Retail.

HARRY ALLEN,

Champion of all Champions. Gentlemen, if you want a real good show bird or contest singing Linnets, try one of mine, and you will never regret it. I am patronised by all the leading contest singers, including Mr. David Bentley, of Great Harwood, Mr. Hodge, etc., etc., these are men who understand the Linnet. I have some big, fine cock Linnets, very tame; stand well, will make sure winners, 1/- each; extra picked birds, singing beautifully, 1/6 each; no rubbish, and every bird guaranteed; cock Linnets, singing beautifully in cage, with a packet of my special mixture and instructions how to feed, 3/- the lot, real bargains. I defy any dealer to supply the same for the money. Any gentleman who gets one or two of these birds, with cages, has a very good chance of getting a real champion, as my champion which I refused £15 for, was a bird similar to these two years ago, therefore, I can highly recommend them. I have ten house-moulted cock Linnets, just through the moult, finger tame, singing with their wings down, price 10/6 each, honestly worth double the money, they will sing anywhere. Look at this: Great Harwood. Dear sir,—The bird I got from you won 1st prize, the first time it was hung at a contest, D. Bentley to H. Allen. This is another proof that I have the finest lot of Linnets ever seen or heard. If you want your birds to sing at one another with their wings down, send P.O. 1/6 for my book of secrets, post free. Four packets of my special mixture 1/-; Yorkshire and Lancashire Linnet whistles 6d. each; beware of imitations; cash or deposit.—Harry Allen, 12, Brown Hill-cres., Harehills, Leeds.

MATTHEWS, LINNET KING.

Exhibitors, Mule breeders, and contest singers, if you have never been in possession of a first-class winner at showing or contest singing, I should like to send you one of my specially selected birds; been selected from hundreds; you have only to state what you want; any kind of British birds, and I will send them at my own risk on seven full days' approval, to any distance. I keep nothing but the best, and I don't want your money, only ask for your orders and pay when you are perfectly satisfied; over 200 selected birds sent out this season, and not one single bird returned; scores of open winners and contest singers been supplied by me last season at working men's prices; call, and inspect my British bird buildings, and select your own birds from hundreds, which I always keep in stock; everybody is welcome, and receive my best attention. I have the largest selection of Linnets in England. Buy fine healthy birds, with nut-brown back, well spotted like Thrushes, selected from hundreds, 1/6; also a few large picked specimens, 2/-, sure winners; also the nicest lot of blood-red-breasted birds ever seen, singing beautiful, 1/6, with grand singing cage and packet of my special feed, instructions how to feed, 2/6, real bargains. If you want your birds to sing with their wings down, and shine like silk, try my special mixed wild seed, four packets a 1/-. Goldfinches! Goldfinches! large selected Welsh and Shropshire Goldfinches, extra large birds, seven buttons on back, well moonied with bulldog heads, make sure winners, 2/6, bargains, all birds sent out exactly as described. Anyone requiring a first-class team of British, any kind, send direct to me, and I will send on approval willingly; can fairer terms be offered? Read what others say:—August 16th, 135, Holmstead-st., Luiss Vale, Pittsburg. Sir, I received bird safe, and am perfectly satisfied; it is singing beautiful. Thanking you for your honest dealings, from Mr. Gale, to Linnet King. August 24th. 726, Ecclesall-rd., Sheffield. Bird, seed and cage arrived safe. He seems a grand Linnet, very steady. Thanking you for your prompt delivery, from Mr. Warby, to Matthews, Bird Catcher. I have received scores of testimonials from successful Mule breeders this season from my special birds. If you want a good bird, send at once, and have it on seven days' approval; cash or deposit.—Matthews, Bird Catcher, 44, George-st., Hyde, Cheshire.

BRITISH BIRD EXHIBITORS

Those intending moulting out some winners write me. Have supplied hundreds of winners this last few years; ½d. stamp will bring you a few testimonials from successful exhibitors which I have received with birds I have supplied; have hundreds of British birds coming in now, and I sell more than any other dealer in the world, and having such a big chance of picking out winners, can supply beautiful 1907 cock Bullfinches, extra picked, 2/6, 3/- and 4/- each; cock Linnets, 1/-, 1/6, and 2/-; cock Bullfinches, 2/6 and 3/-. YOU MAY SAY

"A Bird's a Bird," wherever you buy it. I don't gainsay that, but everyone knows there's a vast amount of difference in birds, and as it costs no more to keep a good one than a waster, it naturally follows that all sensible persons try to get the best. All birds sent out by me are guaranteed exactly as described, and are sent on approval entirely at my own risk, with the distinct understanding that unless purchasers are fully satisfied, they only have to return bird and I refund money in full. Can fairer terms be offered? Splendid large genuine Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and well on seed, 1/6 each, three 4/-, six 6/6 twelve 12s.; specially selected large birds to moult for exhibition or muling, 2/- each, three 5/-, six 8/6, or 16 - dozen; grand large cock brown Linnets, well on seed, and warranted all cocks, 8d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6, twelve 4/-; specially-selected exhibition cocks in song 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4s.; cock Greenfinches, three 1/-, six 1/6; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 2/-; cock Skylarks, in nest feather, 1/- and 1/6 each; hand-reared cock Larks in free song, 3/-, 4/-, and 5/- each; hand-reared Merlin Hawks, finger-tame, 5/- each; cock Goldfinch Mules in splendid song, 4/- and 5/- each; hen Canaries, 1/- and 1/6 each; Cages of every description in stock; dealers please send stamp for wholesale list of cages, it will save pounds. All birds are warranted well caged, properly on hard seed, and have been properly netted in County of Worcester, not the miserable little Irish specimens caught on birdlime. See following: "42, Croft-st., Bonhill, Scotland, August 18th.—Sir, Please send me three Goldfinches. I got one from you last year, and it turned out a champion, and has filled eggs with a Bullfinch hen. Yours, J. Brannan." "4, King Edward-ter., Tanfield Lea, Durham, August 19th.—Sir, Goldfinch arrived safe, and I am well pleased with it. Thanks for prompt attention. Yours, J. Nicholson." "14, Marine-ter., Skinningrobe, August 20th. —Sir, Received six Linnets, and am well pleased with them. I got six from Lancs, and yours were far superior to them. Please send another six. I have just sold one of last lot for 2/3. Yours, C. Hart." Testimonials similar to above arriving by every post. Thousands open to inspection any time. Don't forget everything on approval; cage birds deposit system and money freely refunded if every satisfaction not given. See Appliance column for further advertisement.

IN THE COURTS.

GOLDFINCHES IN CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

At the recent Newmarket (Cambs.) Petty Sessions, Thos. Fenn, bird catcher, Isleham, was charged at the instance of Inspector Chas. Oakley, R.S.P.C.A., with unlawfully having in his possession, at Isleham, six goldfinches, recently taken. Defendant pleaded not guilty.—Evidence was given that Inspector Oakley, with Police Constable Rowlinson, of the Cambs. Police, visited Isleham Railway Station on the evening of July 7th, and saw in the booking hall there a wooden box containing several Goldfinches and a number of Linnets. The birds could be distinctly seen through an opening in the box, but could not be counted. Inspector Oakley and Police Constable Rowlinson saw the defendant, who admitted that he sent some Goldfinches and Linnets, and said he caught them the same day on Mr. W. Rumbelow's land at Freckenham.—Fenn denied that he admitted the box contained Goldfinches and Linnets. He said "Finches and Linnets," and subsequently explained that by "Finches" he meant Chaffinches. He produced an invoice which he received, with a remittance in payment for the consignment. The invoice comprised: 12 Linnets 3s., and six Chaffinches 2s. If the Finches had been Goldfinches they would have made 1s. each.—After further evidence the justices decided to convict, and inflicted a fine of 15s., with 14s. 6d. costs.

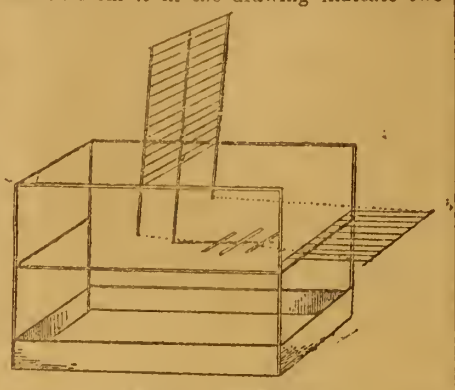
ILLUSTRATED IDEAS



Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

NOVEL TRAP CAGE.

Sent by M. Hayes, 64, Liverpool-road, Watford.

I enclose herewith a sketch of a novel trap cage, which I worked with very good results last year. The front top half of cage is worked on two pieces of wire, and the dots marked from it in the drawing indicate two fine pieces of string fastened to the outer sides, so that when the top falls down it draws the front up with it. Then, if one bird is sitting on the front, and another should jump off the side into the cage, the trap catches both birds.

A HANDY CARRYING BOX.

Sent by D. Barnes, 9, Richmond-terrace, Shelton, Stoke-on-Trent, Staffs.

Having been a reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, for some considerable time, I thought I would bring to your notice a handy carrying box, which I use and find far superior to paper or linen bags, etc. I am enclosing sketch of same. You will notice that there is a piece of wood cut out at the back, so one may get the hand in or out. This opening is permanent. The sliding doors front and back, run in grooves, which any novice can make with a sharp penknife. At the front, inside the sliding door, is a row of wires, so one can inspect the bird before getting it out. The frame is made out of ordinary boxwood, ⅜-in. thick.

The Graceful Warblers.

There is a certain beauty of form in all birds. Of our British birds the tiny warblers appear to one to excel all others in neatness and grace. There is a charm about the greater Whitethroat and the Blackcap; but neither of these appeal to our sense of beauty of form as do the lesser Whitethroat, Willow Warbler, and Chiffchaff. Every position and every motion of these little birds is graceful and becoming, whether clinging to a stalk, peering under the leaves, or stopping to warble a joyous song, they are always attractive and interesting. They are as restless and as sprightly as a Tit, to which is added the grace and neatness of [illegible]

CLUB REPORTS.

BURY C.B.S.

Meeting held at the Textile Hall, on Tuesday night, Mr. Wolstenholm presiding. The main business was the making of arrangements for the annual show, which will be held in November. It was decided to promote another drawing competition for school children; to increase the number of classes from four to six, and to extend the age limit to fifteen years. There will be classes for boys and girls in both black and white and coloured drawings; and the subjects have to be birds that can be kept in a cage. The classes for the show were also arranged. The open show of Rollers is to be held in January, and the secretary was instructed to make certain arrangements. The Secretary read a letter from Dr. Cook accepting, with pleasure, the invitation of the society to open the annual show and distribute the prizes. The remainder of the business was of a routine character.

CITY OF GLASGOW O.A.

Committee meeting on Thursday last carried through a lot of business connected with the show, which takes place in October. The printing and prize cards were fully discussed and settled, and other matters which came under review were passed on for further consideration. The only matter of anxiety to the committee is the dearth of specials, and a special appeal is made to all absent members of committee as well as to fanciers and all well-wishers of this old society, to relieve them of this anxiety, by coming forward and giving a special. With a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman, Mr. Young, the proceedings terminated.

DARLINGTON CANARY & B.B.F.A

At a special meeting of the above association, held at the George Hotel, on August 28th, it was decided to make our association open to any person wishing to become a member, subject to being proposed and seconded by two members, instead of being confined to the borough. Any person wishing to become a member may do so on the payment of 3/-, on or before our monthly meeting previous to the Open Show, which amount pays any member up to the end of the year, and entitles said member to show in members' classes at Open Show. It was decided that the silver bowl presented by our president (Mr. H. Pike Pease, M.P.), be competed for at our Open Shows for the best bird shown in the members' classes, to be won three times by any member before becoming his absolute property, but not necessarily in succession. Our Open Show, to be held on November 2nd, will be held under Cage Bird Union Rules. There are several new members to propose at our next meeting, to be held on September 25th, and any person wishing to become a member should communicate with the Hon. Secretary, who will be pleased to give any further information. R. S. BLACK, hon. sec., 42, Brook-terrace, Darlington.

We have made an alteration of the date fixed for our show to November 30th. Our reason for so doing is that Edinburgh will be holding an open show on the same date that we had fixed for our show here, also Hamilton. If we had not made a change of date we could have looked for nothing but a failure, and this does not pay:—THOS. DUNCAN, Whitburn and Dis. C.B.S.

THE PROPER TREATMENT OF CHAFFINCHES.

SIR,—I read with much interest the article written by "On the Watch Tower" on "Proper Treatment of Chaffinches," in last week's CAGE BIRDS, and should be pleased if you could get him to answer the following questions either through your columns or by sending me his address, so as I could write to him direct. The cage I keep my Chaffinch in has a roof sloping to the back, and the measurements are back to front about 15 inches width, across about 16 18 inches, height in front about 18 inches, height at back about 15 inches. It has four perches in it, one beside each of the food glasses, one midway, and one at the top of the cage. Is this cage suitable to keep it in? I feed it on Finches' Food and ants eggs and a mealworm or two as a treat. I give it a bath every morning, though it does not always seem inclined to take it. It is hung out all day, and as I am in the country it gets plenty of light and sunshine. It sings from first thing in the morning till dusk, and seems quite happy. I have had it in a cage for about 18 months. Please say if this is cruel, as, if so, I would at once let it go, as I have no wish to keep it in captivity if it is not happy, though I should be sorry to let it go. If you could get "On the Watch Tower" to answer these questions I should feel much obliged. MISGUIDED.

SIR,—I was very pleased with the letter signed "Misguided," which the Edltor has forwarded to me for reply. It breathes a spirit which I would were more common amongst those who keep the beautiful Chaffinch in captivity. "Misguided" will see, if he refers to my letter, that the measurements of the cage in which he keeps his Chaffinch exceed those I gave, and that is well. I have no doubt he has done what he could to ensure the comfort and happiness of his bird in captivity. My primary object was to reach those who, unlike "Misguided," never give a thought to the comfort and happiness of the birds they keep in a captive state, but feed them improperly, cruelly confine them in dark cages and the like, and condemn them to a life of semi-darkness in order—what? That they may sing better, forsooth! If "Misguided"—not so very much so, after all—will go on doing as he is doing, no one will have just cause to accuse him of cruelty. If, however, he could spare even a larger cage still, he would add to the happiness of his favourite. ON THE WATCH TOWER.

"THOSE PRINTERS" AND COAL TAR FOR "CANARY ASTHMA."

SIR,—Friday, August 16th, was a blank day for CAGE BIRDS, because of "those printers" again. The irritability of my feeble brain cells set up by the absence of the punctual weekly appearance of CAGE BIRDS increased hourly, until I could not eat my bread and cheese, and "going supperless to bed." I had ample time during the feverish and sleepless night of just fixing to a nicety the eternal blessedness of each individual operative printer. I did not get really well until I read in CAGE BIRDS of the 24th the publisher's notice that "We (CAGE BIRDS) have taken such steps as will guard against the remotest possibility of such a highly regrettable event being repeated." It is not for me to question what those steps might be, but, so far as I can understand the position of affairs, an Editor may have all the possible natural talents qualifying him for his position, and may lose no opportunity for their cultivation; the sub-editor and all the staff may be full of industry and enthusiasm, but "those printers" must get the sorting and placing of the type. One supposes there should exist a "printer's reader," but his holidays seem protracted, or his fits of abstention too frequent. One can fancy him "just going round the corner" every now and then, or ticking off—not the work, but the time every few minutes. But the remedy, what is the remedy? I have admitted I don't know; I cannot even imagine the counterplot against another breakdown, but I may perhaps be allowed to make a suggestion. I know a very large printing works from which bushels of old type are thrown out with other refuse. Now, if these separate grains of type, stimulated by the rotting paper trimmings and chemical solutions with which type has been cleaned could be made to sprout and, by process of evolution and selection, grow into prime heads, like spring cabbage, leaf upon leaf, duly printed, cut, and fastened together, we might then know the seasonable time that we might get our copies. The influence of CAGE BIRDS is so great that even I did not fail to get my share of applications for the solution of tar. A copy of CAGE BIRDS was brought to me, and I read "Liquor Resi Carbonia. P.B.," as a printer's variant of "Liquor Picis Carbonis, British Pharmacopœia," i.e., "standard solution of coal tar." So I did not offer a packed article of Mr. Wright's or Mr. Wrong's, for my knowledge of Canary fanciers' requirement does not prompt me to offer them a quart of German Mineral Water at 1s 6d, when a "ha'porth of salts" would suit better, nor a half-crown bottle of Bino-Phosphates because dickey was a trifle below par.

J. NORTH, M.P.S.

Several Letters held over.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

The Java Sparrow.

"No penny; no ha'penny. No penny; no ha'penny." These words, repeated in a low, monotonous voice, came over the privet hedge of the square garden where Peter was playing, but he could not see the speaker, because of the close green leaves. So he ran to the iron gate, and, looking through its bars, he saw a man with the yellow face, slanting eyes, long, black pigtail, and blue cotton clothes of a son of the Celestial Empire. This Chinaman had a kind of bamboo tray slung round his neck, and on the tray stood a little bamboo cage, in which hopped up and down a sleek, grey bird. He was a very beautiful bird, his general body colour being of the same blue-grey shade as the back of Peter's Bullfinch, while his head was black, his cheeks snow white, and his large bill of the brightest rose pink.

*The Macaw.

The Macaw is a very pretty bird of all colours. It has a long tail; sometimes about two feet long, and very pretty eyes. Some Macaw's beaks are black, and some white. They have very pretty wings, and their feathers are soft and silky. Some Macaws make very good talkers. They come from America and the West Indies. They are very destructive.—Sent by CICELY GILBERT (aged 11 years), Burnett House, High-street, Ashford, Kent.

*A Nest in a Motor Car.

One November Sunday when father and I were walking in the stable where we now keep the motor cars, he was looking for one of his tools in his motor car, when he discovered a little Bantam of his which had made a nest on his seat, and it had a sweet little egg in it. Our man has found an egg three times this week. The little Bantam is very tame, and always come running after me when it hears me open the door where I keep the corn; it will eat out of my hand, and will let you stroke it.—Miss ZOE COOPER (age 11), Killerby Hall, near Scarborough.

 The Owl.

Once as my brother and I were walking in a wood we saw a very large hole in an oak tree, and my brother climbed up the tree. An Owl flew out of the hole, and there were four eggs in the nest. The eggs were nearly white, and as she was sitting we left the eggs alone. Beside the eggs were laid six mice. About a week after we went to the nest again, and there were three young Owls this time. We left them for five days. Then my brother climbed the tree the third time, and putting a piece of rag in one hole, caught the mother Owl. I carried the three young ones in my arms, and we put all four of them in a cage. The father Owl came each night and brought with him birds and mice. There was one funny thing about all the birds and mice he brought—they all had their heads off! We kept them for some time, then the youngest choked himself. One night when my brother fed them he forgot to shut the door of the cage, and when the father Owl came the hen came out of the cage and killed one of the young ones and flew away. We kept the other little Owl for one month and five days and it died, so we lost all four of our pets.—ALFRED STEPHENS (age 11 years), Beaulieu Schools.

THE SHOWS.

CANONBIE.

This annual turnout was held in connection with the flower show, etc., in the Canonbie school, and adjoining grounds, and proved a great success. The weather was all that could be desired for the outing, and there were a large number of visitors to see the exhibition. Mr. John Bannay, Dumfries, again judged, and his awards gave general satisfaction.

BORDER FANCY: 1, W. Jardine, clear yellow cock, an easy win, fine and typical; 2, T. Greve. FANCY CANARY, EVEN OR UNEVEN MED.: 1, 2, T. E. McVittie, two yellows, both even marks, first winning the special as best in the section, fair bird in all points. GREEN OR FOIL MED.: 1, W. A. Lockhart, good yellow piebald, nice head and wings, deficient in tail; 2, J. Elliot, buff marked, might have changed places with first, a good type of Border, as tight as wax. A.V. CANARY: 1, 2, C. Vere, a good buff crest, with splendid head and body of the Bullfinch type, 2nd, a fine crestbred, will be heard of again. MULE: 1, McVittie, a dark yellow Goldfinch and Canary, an easy winner; 2, Lockhart, a yellow variegated of medium quality. BRITISH BIRD: 1, Lockhart, a good Bully in fine condition, wins easy, colour faultless; 2, Laidlaw, a Hawfinch, bad in moult. FOREIGN: 1, Laidlaw, a green Parrot in fine plumage; 2, Hudson.

TROON.

The Annual Show of the Troon Cage Bird Society was held on August 31st, in the Unionist Hall. The executive were, as last year, headed by the well-known judge and fancier, Mr. Tom Fullerton, who looks, if that were possible, more enthusiastic in his hobby every time we meet him; he was ably seconded by Mr. Jno. Ferguson, as secretary, and nothing seemed to be wanting on their part to do all that lay in their power for the exhibits or the visitors. They were well backed up by an able and willing committee. The hall is an ideal birdroom well lighted and free from draughts, and nicely shelved round at a nice height for viewing exhibits. A very pleasing sight was the number of surrounding gentry, who patronised the show, and who seemed to take a great interest in the feathered tribe. Mr. James F. Dewar judged. The following are the awards:—

Scotch Fancies, as usual, leading. YELLOW COCKS: Only one, and that a buff, no award in consequence. YELLOW HENS: 1, Baird, very good type, good top, and nice back, takes a rattling good position, pushed the buff cock very hard for special, and only lost on the tape; 2 and 3, Jas. Price, two very good birds, but do not show so well as winner; 4, Cameron, much smaller. BUFF COCKS: 1 and spl, Price, grand size, great depth of rib, fine square shoulders, and very determined drive, wins well; 2, Laidler, fails in size and stop, but a good fair bird. BUFF HENS: 1 2, Price, two really fine birds, former a grand yellow buff, takes a fine position; 2, grand old bird, but too thick in the neck to-day. NORWICH COCK: 1, A. Malcolmson, clean buff, grand size, fine feather and shape; 2, Hunter, scarcely so good in feather, or near so good in shape as winner; 3, H. Henry, rather rough in feather, needs fining down; 4, Forrester, too finely drawn. NORWICH HEN: 1 and spl., Geo. A. Thomson, grand type, rare quality of feather, fine shaped head, very typical; 2, Forrester, big bodied bird, very fine feather, but head too small for body, still a grand stock bird; 3, Calderwood, buff, fails in type and feather to winner; 4, A. Malcolmson, nice young Yellow; 5, Hunter. BORDER FANCY, YELLOW, OR BUFF COCK: 1, T. Findlay, neat yellow, good type, and nice close feathered, well-shaped wings and tail; 2, Guthrie, fails in type and closeness of feather to winner, but a good one; 3, McGhee, nice stamp of buff, rather inclined to spread its tail; 4, McNicol, good buff, tail inclined to spread; 5, Hogg; 6, Henderson. YELLOW OR BUFF HENS: 1, and spl, and 2, Wm. Mossic, two right good ones, former lovely yellow, in rare bloom for the season, very typical and all over neat and natty; 2, buff, young bird drawn on same lines, both nicely staged; 3, Hogg, nice buff, fails in feather and type to winners; 4, Montgomery; 5, McGhee; 6, Henderson. B.F. ANY OTHER COLOUR COCK: 1, Findlay, very nice variegated yellow, rather wild, but wins; 2, Duncan, nice feathered buff, fails in closeness of tail; 3, McGhee, variegated yellow, good stamp; 4, Montgomery. ANY OTHER COLOUR HEN: 1, McGhee, buff var.; 2, Duncan, buff variegated. GOLDFINCH BRITISH: 1 and spl, John Cram, a very nice Finch, in good condition for season; 2, Piper, fails a trifle in blaze and not in such good feather; 3, Taylor, looks a good bird, but very soft; 4, Tait; 5, Johnston. GOLDFINCH, FOREIGN: 1, R. Young, good size and feather, very pale in blaze; 2, Wilson, very ragged in moult. LINNET: 1 and spl, McQuiston, grand size and rare feather, very steady, rather deficient in markings for our fancy, but wins easy; 2, Scoular, another good one, but half-way through moult; looks as if it will be a right good one when finished; 3, Rae, good colour, but fails in pencil-

SHOREHAM.

In connection with the first annual show of th... Shoreham and District Fanciers' Association, he... on August 28th, a few classes were given for can... birds. The time of year was most inopportune, ho... ever, for a show of this description, as very fe... birds are in a fit state to exhibit, owing to th... exigencies of the moult. Consequently the entri... were sparse, but several nice specimens were e... tered. Our old and esteemed friend, Mr. Walt... Ornithological Fanciers' Association.
THE 19th ANNUAL EXHIBITION

Of Canaries, Mules, British and Foreign Birds, Pigeons, and Bantams, etc. (open to the United Kingdom), will be held in the Union Hall, Selkirk, Thursday, 10th October, 1907. 11 Classes for Border Fancy. Judge, H. BENNET (KELSO). Prize money, 8/-, 4/-, 2/-. Entry 1/-. Entries close on October 2rd. Schedules, apply to the Sec., ARCHD. J. WATSON, 2a, Hill Street, Selkirk

I shall find Part 2 of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL invaluable when the time comes for sending out our Schedules, writes Mr. G. F. WOOLHOUSE, the manager of Dulwich and Peckham Show.

After a fruitlesss attempt to breed Blackbirds and Thrushes, which had been imported from England, in the Botanical Gardens at Darjeeling, Mr. W. Earle, I.C.S., when Deputy-Commissioner, set the birds free, since when the Blackbirds have multiplied, but the Thrushes have disappeared entirely.

I hope Border fanciers will not overlook the fact that we have made four classes for Borders at our forthcoming show, which are to be confined to Amateur and Novice members:—W. STAFFORD, sec., Stockport Bird Fanciers' Association.

There appears to be mistake in the date of Birmingham Show in your fixtures; the date should be December 4th, and not 4th and 5th, as stated:—H. C. WILKINS, hon. sec.

Mr. JOHN H. IRELAND, Cage Bird Secretary of the Morecambe F.A., writes:—Our judges are now fixed up as follows: Messrs. H. W. Battye, W. J. Ferguson, and C. Houlton.

On taking my copy of CAGE BIRDS to spend a happy hour, I was delighted with the sketch of Bullfinch on front page. I consider him a splendid model, and had he been in coloured form would he something to be proud of for all lovers of birds:—G. GALT (Liverpool).

The Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. has engaged a quintet of quite veteran judges for the open show, in Messrs. Bexson, House, Payne, Houlton, and Roe, and the committee, we hear, is now in the thick of preparing the classification. The patronage of most of the Specialist Clubs has been secured, and an order has been placed for special staging for the show so that more birds may be staged and yet allow considerably more room for visitors to inspect same.

I see I am made to appear and disappear at will at Antwerp Show, writes Mr. J. F. DEWAR, the well-known Scottish fancier and judge. I did not go as I had a little baby daughter born just a week or so before. But I patronised it as usual by giving my annual donation towards the prizes, hence in the beginning of the report it says "was patronised by Mr. Dewar, all the way from Edinburgh." The president in his opening speech said "I was absent in flesh though present in spirit."

As Mr. Burns, the chairman, and myself are away on our holidays, writes Mr. V. WYNN, as well as several prominent members of the City and Surburban A.C.B., we have decided to abandon the meeting which should have taken place on Monday, the 9th inst.

Remarkable Offer to Canary Fanciers.—1,000 cwts. of Canary grit to be given away. During September and October we will give 1 cwt. of our Celebrated Health Grit absolutely free, to every purchaser of 1 cwt. of Canary seed. Giant Spanish, 24s. cwt.; finest Turkish, 15s. cwt. Samples on application. Carriage paid to nearest station. Cash with order.—John Dibb, seed importer, 31 and 33, White Abbey-road, Bradford. Tel. 247x. [Advt.

The C.B. Union Secretaryship.

Referring to the rumour of my resignation as secretary of the Cage Bird Union, writes Mr. G. W. F. LYTHGOE, which you published some time ago, a change in my business necessitated this, but arrangements having been made to afford me some clerical assistance (kindly undertaken by Mr. J. Raynes), I have decided to continue in office until the end of the present year.

A Book on Yorkshires.

From CAGE BIRDS office has been issued this week a book bearing the title "Yorkshire Canaries, How to Breed, Manage, and Exhibit." The author is that popular judge and expert, Mr. H. W. Battye, the president of the Yorkshire Union. There is little need for us to speak of the ability of Mr. Battye to write such a work, his long standing in the Fancy and his great experience as a breeder, exhibitor, judge, and writer, are as well known to readers of CAGE BIRDS as unto ourselves. From cover to cover the book is full of interesting and instructive matter, and will, we feel convinced, do much to make the bird of grace and style even more popular than it already is. It has been illustrated by Messrs. Norman and Simpson, whose work has long received the approbation of the Fancy, and it is one of the most complete, as it is one of the cheapest handbooks ever placed before the Cage Bird Fancy. All interested in Yorkshires should not fail to procure a copy from the manager of CAGE BIRDS. The price is 1s. 2d., post free.

EXETER & DEVON

Under C.B.U. Rules.

Open Cage Birds Show, October 16.

Judge, Mr. J. H. PAYNE, Gloucester.
Entries close October 5th. Schedules of CORNISH & ADAMS,
90. REGENT STREET, ST. THOMAS, EXETER.

I received over 60 orders from all parts last week, thanks to your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. S. CAPEY (Sheffield).

Mr. J. Raynes will act as show manager for the forthcoming Manchester Show on October 25th and 26th. Owing to business changes, writes Mr. LYTHGOE, I am unable to undertake the work this year. I am, however, continuing the secretaryship of the M. and N.C.O.S., and still carry on my printing business, but all communications should in future be sent to my private address, 25, Stamford-street, Old Trafford, Manchester, and not to my office.

The Lowestoft C.B.S. have decided to hold a show on November 21st and 22nd. open to the County of Suffolk only. Mr. J. Mackley is to judge, and it will be under C.B.U. Rules. Mr. Francis hopes that Suffolk men will rise to the occasion and give the Lowestoft Society a good send off.

It may interest your readers in Kent to know that the chairman of the Dover Fur and Feather Society—Mr. Edwin Birch—has presented us with four challenge bowls—one each for the Poultry, Pigeons, Rabbits and Cage Birds. These trophies are open to Kent competition, and become the property of the exhibitor who wins them on three occasions:—A. S. HORREX, secretary.

Writing from Montreal, Canada, Mr. D. BRUCE says:—I may state that the Scotch Fancy breeders here have had a record year for numbers, whilst the quality of the birds has improved wonderfully The Norwich and Yorkshire breeders have not done quite so well. We are looking forward to having a grand turn out, and a good time at our annual show in October.

Mr. LOUIS J. ARRIGHI writes from Louella, Cramond, Midlothian:—My business is growing rapidly and it takes all my time to cope with it, so much so that I have now to keep a man to look after my birds, and then they are not done to as I would wish. Any spare time I can snatch I am either gathering wild seeds for the birds or taking exercise. I have fitted up a very nice outside aviary at my house here in the country, mainly for moulting purposes, while I am the six months from town, but I could also breed in it and may do so next year if spared. Had a very poor breeding season, got but a lot of "squibs," I blame the cold weather and no heat in my bird room at Harrison View, my town house. If I breed there next year I will have heat on. I have got hot water pipes put through my bird room that I can turn on and off at will.

The Yorkshire Union.

From Mr. Hammond we have received the Year Book of the Yorkshire Union of Cage Bird Societies, and it is indeed quite a bulky volume, bearing abundant testimony to the power possessed by unity. It contains the new rules, a full list of the affiliated societies and their members, the officers, the delegates with their addresses, and the names of the societies they represent. The rules, which now number forty-four, are given in extenso, as are the dates of the Union shows, with the names of the judges. With this season the Union starts on what is practically a new life, and we wish it all the success that enthusiasm and hard work should produce.

The Cinematograph in Birdland.

The habits of different species of even the "wildest" birds will soon be familiar to any one who cares to visit the theatre. The management of the Palace Theatre, Shafteshury Avenue, London, have added a series of living pictures, illustrating the life of birds, to their programme which begins on Monday next. "Birdland" to the majority of people, means some out-of-the-way place only visited rarely by the naturalist. The pictures show why this is so. They have been obtained from some of the less accessible haunts of birds by Mr. Oliver G. Pike, F.R.G.S., and Mr. H. Armytage Sanders, who made a special journey to islands in the north. Armed with a specially constructed silent camera, they spent a considerable time on the sea coast, and in spite of difficulties that seemed almost insuperable, they have brought back a graphic series of pictures.

Another splendid series of pictures illustrating the habits of inland birds was shown for the first time by the Urban Company at the Alhambra Theatre last Monday night, September 1st, and enthusiastically received. The scenes included some interesting living pictures of the Sedge Warbler's attention to its young. The mother is seen bringing home the food for its newly-hatched chicks, and feeding each inmate of the nest in turn. The presence of the photographers—Messrs. Richard and Cherry Kearton—was obviously suspected by the birds, and their careful look round for the intruder from time to time is plainly shown on the film, giving a quaint touch of reality to the pictures.

CANARY BREEDING COMPETITION.

A large number of entries has been made in this competition. All of them will be carefully gone through, and the result announced as soon as possible.

"CAGE BIRDS" GREAT PRIZE COMPETITION.

£200 IN HARD CASH

To be distributed amongst owners of PRIZE CAGE BIRDS this forthcoming Show Season.

ALL SECTIONS INCLUDED.

To encourage the exhibition of prize Cage Birds, and centre public attention upon Shows advertising in "Cage Birds," we have evolved the following Great Prize Competition for Exhibitors of Cage Birds who are readers of "Cage Birds." The Show season will be starting in a few weeks, and between September and February next we propose offering Special Cash Prizes TO TOTAL A SUM OF PROBABLY not less than £200.

This amount will be distributed equally amongst the shows appearing in "Cage Birds" "Dates Fixed" Column, under the following conditions:—

CONDITIONS.

Exhibitors participating in the Competition will be required to mark each entry they make in the competition with the letters "C.B." and to fasten on the front of the entry form an adhesive Special Coupon, to be obtained only from the MANAGER, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Entry Forms and Coupons must in every case, without exception, be sent to the Secretary of the Show and not to "Cage Birds."

There will be a fresh set of numbered Coupons for each Show where the Competition is in progress. The Coupons issued for the past Shows will not be available for any subsequent event.

REMEMBER—ONE BIRD, ONE SHOW, ONE COUPON.

When entering Birds for "Cage Birds" Prize Competition and sending their entries to the Show Secretary, exhibitors must mark each entry competing in our Competition with the letters, "C.B."

PRIZES OFFERED.

The prizes offered by "Cage Birds" at each Show taking part will be

10/-, 6/-, AND 4/- IN CASH

to be allotted respectively to

The Best FIRST PRIZE Bird,
The Best SECOND PRIZE Bird,
The Best THIRD PRIZE Bird,

to be judged irrespective of sex, variety of breed, selected from birds entered for "C.B." Competition prizes.

IMPORTANT.

The winning birds at each Show will be debarred from winning another "C.B." prize at any subsequent event.

COST OF COUPONS TO COMPETITORS.

The cost to competitors of each coupon will be Sixpence, and coupons must be purchased from "Cage Birds" for each Show at least four days before date of advertised closing of entries.

DISTRIBUTION OF PROFITS.

Whatever profit (if any) accrues from this scheme will (after 25 % has been deducted to cover postage and working expenses) be distributed among the societies participating in it in the proportion that entries are received from each show. If the scheme results on the whole in a loss, the loss will be borne entirely by "Cage Birds."

THE GRAND FINAL.

By special arrangement with the Crystal Palace show authorities, at the Great National Show on January 31st, 1908, the winners of all "C.B." coupon prizes during the season up to date may compete, and the sum of

will be divided as follows:—

£5 for the best First Prize bird,
£2 10s. for the best Second Prize bird,
£1 10s. for the best Third Prize bird,
£1 for the best Fourth Prize bird,

selected from birds so entered—winners of our coupon prizes which secure Firsts, Seconds, Thirds, or Fourths at the Crystal Palace Show.

Exhibitors must note that coupons will not by themselves entitle them to exhibit birds. Entries must be made in the ordinary way, and the cost of coupons regarded as additional fees for additional prizes.

TO SECRETARIES AND SHOW PROMOTERS.

Societies wishing to participate in this competition must

1. Guarantee to advertise their show in CAGE BIRDS to the extent of not less than 25/-.
2. Insert the full conditions of the scheme in a page in their schedules and catalogues.
3. Make application to the Manager of CAGE BIRDS on or before the third Thursday in September next.

The rules of each show shall prevail in each case, but in any dispute not covered by such rules the decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS shall be final.

This competition is certain to benefit shows in the following ways:—

1. It will increase entries considerably at every show taking part in the competition.
2. It will ensure an entry of good quality birds at each exhibition.
3. It will heighten the excitement and increase the interest attaching to each show, and so secure increased publicity for those ventures.

Address all suggestions, applications, &c., to F. CARL, 154, Fleet Street, London.

A PRIZE COMPETITION FOR KEEPERS OF FOREIGN BIRDS.

Cash in Exchange for your Experiences.

Turn Spare Moments to Account.

In our position as Editor of this Journal, it has been borne in on us that keepers of Foreign birds are either singularly modest, or singularly reticent. Not a line does one receive from the great majority of them concerning their experiences in their own particular branch of our hobby. This is not as it should be. It affords no encouragement to others to take up the keeping of the beautiful and interesting species which reach our shores from other climes. Those on the threshold of our hobby, so to speak, must have their footsteps guided by bird lovers who have already trodden the first paths, and can thus advise the beginner how to avoid the pit-falls besetting them, and render his path as smooth and easy to travel over as is possible. To compass this is a duty every bird-keeper owes to the birds which go to make up his pet branch of our hobby. And keepers of Foreign birds ought not to shirk their responsibilities in this direction.

There must be thousands among the readers of CAGE BIRDS, who have kept Foreign birds of various species, and have much knowledge respecting their keeping, feeding and management stored away in their heads. Put those facts on paper for the benefit of fellow lovers of Foreign birds.

To bring about this desirable end, we offer a

for the best original article on

FOREIGN BIRD KEEPING,

which reaches our offices on or before

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th NEXT.

The said article may concern the making and fitting of an aviary, the stocking and management of an aviary (either indoor or outdoor), the keeping of one particular bird only, or the keeping of a group of birds. In short,

No subject whatever which deals with Foreign Birds is barred.

RULES.

Each essay must be clearly written (or typed), on one side of paper only.

The length is left to competitors, but essays should not contain less than 1,000 words wherever possible.

Faults of spelling and grammar will not be counted against any essay, practical utility, interest, and simplicity being the chief essentials.

No name or address must be put on any essay, but each must be signed with a nom-de-plume, the sender's name and address being attached on a separate sheet of paper.

The Editor's decision will be final. Competent assistance will be called in to aid him in arriving at his decision.

All essays sent in (and any accompanying sketches or photographs) become the property of CAGE BIRDS, but all which are published (over and above the winning essay) will be duly paid for according to their worth to us.

All entries must reach CAGE BIRDS office, 154, Fleet-street, London, E.C., on or before Monday, September 23rd next. Write "Essay Competition" on top left-hand corner of envelope or package.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

Swollen Face.

A.G.B.—The cause of the swelling on your birds' face was no doubt caused in some way. Dissolve as much Boric Acid as will stand on a two shilling piece in warm water, and when tepid, bathe the part gently with a soft piece of sponge. Do this once a day for a week, when I think you will find it will have quite disappeared. Should you find in a day or two that the swelling appears full of matter, you may let it out again with a clean needle.

Slow Moult.

Grocer.—I am pleased to hear that under the treatment advised, your hen recovered sufficiently to rear you two nests of young. The slowness of the moult is no doubt attributable to the cold weather we have been experiencing. I have heard of many who say they never knew of such a slow moulting season. I should not recommend you to rush the moult by any artificial means as such only weakens the birds' constitution, and as you say you can see the effects of the colour food coming through on breast and wings, she will, no doubt, go through all right. You may put a few shreds of saffron in the water and cover over the cage at night-time with a warm cloth.

Looseness of Excreta.

J.H.B.—Give your bird a small teaspoonful of egg-food for three following days, to which add as much Aromatic Confection as will stand on a threepenny piece. Then let him have ten drops of Tincture of Quinine in the water, fresh daily, for a week. Do not give him any greenfood until he has finished moulting. You should have told me mode of feeding, perhaps that is at fault.

How to Feed.

F. H.—(1) You may give the young birds a little crushed hemp in addition to the egg food and soaked seed for two or three weeks. (2) Yes, you may give sand then. (3) Give them the colour food when they are six weeks old, and you must continue with this until they are right through the moult. (4) Yes, the buff hen you mention would be improved by colour feeding, and she would certainly appeal to your taste much more, especially as you say you do not care for pale coloured birds. I think your hen is a buff, the pronounced colour you speak of is no doubt round the cheeks and forehead, on the wing butts and root of tail. (5) Yes, there are always birds for sale at shows, but in most instances the prices put upon them are quite prohibitive, as the owners do not wish to part with them. Sometimes you may pick up a cheap bird out of a selling class. That is a class where they must not exceed a certain price limit, but before claiming any out of the classes, you should have advice. As you are anxious to learn more of the points of Canaries, you cannot do better than do as you suggest, visit a few shows, where probably you may meet some fancier who would be only too pleased to help you. An obliging and courteous secretary would no doubt introduce you to one. Am pleased to have been of service to you in the past.

Cause of Death.

Puzzled.—I take it from your letter that you put your young birds, after they leave the parents, on plain canary seed in addition to a little egg food, and I think this has been the cause of the mischief. Young birds, after leaving the parents, should have crushed hemp for two or three weeks; in fact, until they can crack and digest the canary. Give those which you still have a small teaspoonful each of egg food each day, to which add five drops of Parrish's chemical food, and for a fortnight let them have some crushed hemp seed. You need not limit them, and twice a week let them have a sprig of watercress each. Boil their drinking water previous to using, and in a week's time you may put ten drops of tincture of quinine in the water, on alternate days, for a fortnight.

YORKSHIRES.

Answered by H. W. BATTYE.

A Question of Markings.

Lamplighter.—No. 1, marked both wings and on thigh would in the general run of shows have to be exhibited in the Evenly Marked Class, but if there was no Evenly Marked Class provided, then you would have to show it in the A.O.V. Class. Should the schedule read Clear Marked or Variegated Yorkshire, then this bird would be eligible to compete in this Class. Should schedule read Ticked or Unevenly Marked Yorkshire, then this bird would probably be thrown out as being evenly marked, but different localities have different rules governing their classification. For instance, at shows held under the rules of the Yorkshire Union, this bird would be all right in the class for Ticked or Unevenly Marked, as two-pointed evenly marked birds are under their rules allowed to compete among the unevenly marked birds. When making entries, care should at all times be taken to read the various conditions and regulations under which the show is being held. Nos. 2 and 3 are both unevenly marked birds, and would have to be entered as such, where a class was provided for such birds, but at a show where no Cinnamon Marked Classes are provided in schedule, they would be eligible to compete in the ordinary Yorkshire Classes amongst the Dark-eyed or Green Marked Yorkshires. You do not say whether your birds are Yellows or Buffs, of course, where a class is provided for yellows and another class for buffs, you would have to enter them accordingly.

Off Song.

W.H.—Your bird has evidently been in what is generally termed the loose moult, usually brought on by being kept in some place where the temperature is very variable, where a goodly amount of gas is burnt, or been exposed to draught. Now is just the time to get the bird properly moulted. If you have been keeping it in a warm place, remove it into a room where there is no fire, and this may be the means of forcing it into a proper moult. Put it in a box-cage, and feed on white canary seed, giving in addition a little egg-food, sprinkling a little maw seed over it, and prepare it fresh daily. In the course of ten or twelve weeks your bird will be through the moult, and probably will resume his song again.

CINNAMONS.

Answered by J. NORTH

Work on Cinnamons.

Londoner.—Cassell's "Canaries and Cage Birds" contains an exhaustive chapter on this variety, but great improvements have been made by breeders since that work was published, thirty years' ago. The birds that win nowadays, are much larger and stouter than those depicted in its pages and described in the text. Any efforts to found a strain would land one a long way backwards, unless some stock birds were obtained of the modern type, as the latter are good examples of what every Canary fancier wants, possessing as they do, plenty of size, quality and colour. A second-hand copy of Cassell's book could very likely be got for a guinea through advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, and there is House's "Canary Manual" to be had from this office for 1/2 post free, with a chapter on the breed. The 1906 birthday number of CAGE BIRDS contains a splendid coloured plate of Cinnamons, and a pithy article by this present writer.

LIZARDS.

Answered by BARKER CLEGG.

Won't eat Colour Food.

W.R.A.—You must make your egg food palatable by adding a little crushed hempseed. It is advisable to procure a pestle and mortar, then you would be able to thoroughly incorporate the colour food. Make the following mixture and bottle. It will do for moistening your egg food, and may be given with advantage throughout the moult:—Take 2d. saffron, 2d. cochineal, one teaspoonful Natal pepper, put into a pan with a quart of water, bring to the boil, and let simmer for 15 minutes, strain into a dish or other vessel, then add two teaspoonfuls of demerara sugar and ¼ lb. honey; stir well together whilst hot; when cold, add half a gill of Jamaica rum, and bottle for use. Put one or two teaspoonfuls of this mixture to your food, according to the quantity you make. Regulate to a nice, crumbly moist consistency by the addition of fine oatmeal, or ground rice. You will find by making your food agreeable, and appetising, that the birds will prefer it to the seed. Feed with canary seed only, in seed boxes, which you must allow daily.

BORDERS.

Answered by J. PATTERSON.

Feeding Greens, etc.

Novice.—Feed and treat the same as advised to "Redrob" in last issue. They need the same treatment as other varieties, and you should never listen to the long-winded stories uttered by some would-be experts. Carefully study their characteristics each year, and you will be more able to rely on your own opinion. It is seldom we get a Green free from bronze on wing in the first year, and most of the winners are one-year bred, or older. The bronze leaves them after their second moult. (2) No; I don't recommend much greenfood during the moult. A little seeded mousear, or one head of Plantain, once a week to birds in full health. If you have any "soft," withhold all kinds. Give a little boiled carrot just when nearly finishing, twice a week. Gradually withdraw the mixed seeds and egg-food. (3) Yes; it is very objectionable. If given as you say no good would follow, and especially with Greens, for it would make them still more patchy. It is a splendid tonic for any ailing bird, but should only be used for such.

A Matter of Markings.

A. Purves).—As far as I can gather from your query, your bird is undoubtedly a three-pointed bird, being marked on both eyes and vent. It must he shown amongst the unevens. I expect it will also be marked on thighs, so there is no fear of any judge passing it as a Foul. (2) Yes; a Foul should only have either one or two visable marks, and they may be placed anywhere over the body. However, Foul-thighed birds are now admitted into Clear Classes.

Bird Sickly.

Yellow.—I think the cause of birds' illness was a slight chill caught just prior to breaking into moult. Remove it into your kitchen or other warm place until you see it casting its feathers. Then take it back to your room and cover over with a cloth of some kind. Let him have ten drops of chemical food in drinking water, fresh daily, for one week, and half-a-teaspoonful of egg-food daily, with a pinch of maw seed added to it; also place, every night in wires of cage a small piece of sponge cake with four drops sherry wine added. You might also try him by pulling a few feathers out of his tail, which might start him away into the moult. Withhold the bath and all greenfood.

ROLLERS.

Answered by "SCHOOLMASTER."

A Question of Grit.

Smithfield.—The friend who told you that many leading fanciers of Roller Canarics use no cuttlefish, or mortar, etc., was quite right. Many of those who go in for contest singing (both here and in Germany) believe it is not in the best interests of the bird's voice to let him have such. I can't say that I altogether believe this; I can't quite see where it comes in that pecking and swallowing cuttlefish should injure a Roller's singing. However, the notion that it does so is certainly about. Some Roller men, further, will tell you to give grit only sparingly, say, once a week or so. But I always think the birds eat as much in the one go you let them have at it, as they would if they had the run of it all the week. I will say this, that you certainly should let your Rollers have plenty of good suitable grit in their cages right through the moult, and also let them have some cuttlefish to peck at, and old mortar as well. There is no doubt that these things, by means of the lime, etc., they contain, help largely the growth of the feathers—grit is not used solely to "grind up" food with, as has been so long thought. If it is right that some breeders withhold grit and such-like materials from their birds, then I think that explains the bad plumage, and losing of feathers (bare places) these birds so often suffer with.

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Loss of Sight.

I have a bird which has lost its sight. There is a thin, watery discharge from the eye. Its general health is good, and it sings well. —ANXIOUS ONE.

Anxious One.—The symptoms you describe all point to the fact that the bird has been exposed either to damp or cold, and had the matter been taken in hand at once it is quite possible a cure would have been effected. Now that the matter has been neglected for so long, I am somewhat doubtful. You might try the effect of the following treatment for a fortnight. Place just sufficient Epsom Salts in the drinking water each morning to make it slightly saline, not much, only just enough to make it taste. Bathe the eyes every three hours with a solution prepared as follows:—1 grain of sulphate of zinc, six grains of alum, and one ounce of rose-water. Use a very small soft piece of sponge for the purpose, and after each bathing rinse the sponge in water in which a few drops of Sanitas have been mixed. The last thing at night just touch the lids of the eyes with a little Cuticura Ointment or Zinc Ointment. After the second day stop the Epsom Salts, and medicate the water with ten drops of homœopathic tincture of aconite, and tincture of belladonna. Keep the bird in a warm atmosphere, partially cover the cage during the day, and completely at night.

Outdoor Aviary.

I have some Norwich, and Germans, which have been bred in a large indoor aviary, the windows of which have been open night and day. Would they do well if turned into an outdoor aviary, which has nice, snug sleeping places?—R. GERARD.

R. Gerard.—If your aviary is warm and comfortable, and the birds are of good constitution, I see no reason why they should not do well. You ought, however, to turn them out at once. If you wait a week or two the nights will begin to get chilly, and the birds would feel the change too much. The aspect and construction of the aviary are important to know. If your aviary is constructed of corrugated iron, it is bad for Canaries, and if you contemplate letting them fly loose in it, you could not reasonably expect them to be cultured singers. The low temperature will not prejudicially affect them if they are young and healthy, but you could not, at this time of the year, safely introduce them into the aviary, unless it were constructed of double-walled timber, or brick, and roofed with timber and felt, or tiled. If it is light, bright, dry and snug, you might keep any healthy young birds in it. Much, very much, depends on the aspect, the roof and walls.

Cause of Death.

R. Robbins.—Unfortunately, like many others, you did nothing until too late. From what you say I think your bird has been partially blind for some time, and very probably was not noticed, because, being accustomed to its cage and surroundings, it would not seem to ail anything, being able to find its seed and water. Then it must, I should imagine, have got suddenly worse, when, having failed to find its food it would soon die. Perhaps it would have been best if you had sent it to Mr. North for examination immediately after death.

Struggling and Gasping.

J. Harding.—Your bird evidently is suffering from a paralytic seizure, from which I am afraid he will not recover. The only thing you can do is to keep him as quiet as possible; do not handle him, or excite in any way. Continue feeding as you are now doing. To his drinking water add six drops of nux vomica, fresh daily, for three days; if no better at the end of the fifth day, continue the nux vomica for another three days. Your feeding has been perfectly correct and cannot be improved on. The cause of seizure is as inexplicable in a bird as in ourselves; certainly there is no fault in your management.

Young Birds Dying.

I have a nest of four which are very bad. I have lost two previous nests. They get puffy, put their heads under their wings, and die. From the time of weaning, I feed on canary seed and green food.—R.G.N.

R.G.N.—The cause of your trouble is taking the young birds off the soft food, and putting them on hard seed only, straight away. The change was too sudden, and has upset their digestive organs. Young Canaries require more than plain canary seed after leaving their parents. At first, egg-food may be given twice a week, afterwards once a week; on other days, sound summer German rape, a few groats, and a few hemps; if they become puffy, give bread and milk, which is the best possible food they can have at an early age. Liver disease is generally caused through improper feeding on highly stimulating food, but this does not appear to be so in your case. Do you give particular care and attention to the drinking water, as more often than not the cause of many disorders is bad and stagnant water. The drinking glasses should be thoroughly rinsed and wiped every day. Do you think any smell arises from the shop below. If so, stand a bucket of water in the room, and renew it every morning. If you mix a little Condy's fluid or Sanitas in the water, it will do good.

Treatment During Moult.

I have been told to give my birds a lot of linseed during the moult, but I find it makes them loose in their bowels. Should I give green food during the moult?—The Tracker.

The Tracker.—Whoever advised you to give your birds a lot of linseed was unwise, as it is not advisable to give young birds that are just moulting a lot of linseed, either in the whole state or in a meal, as it will only make them too relaxed. Your best plan is to give them a little best English linseed when they are nearly through moult, say every other day, it will then do them good, and put a nice bloom and gloss on their plumage. You may give the iron right through the moult. Gentian and saffron would not tend to neutralise the colouring properties of the red feed. I should give dandelion, shepherd's purse, groundsel, plantain stalks, chickweed, or any other sound green food that is obtainable during the time they are moulting. Let them have nothing but best Spanish canary until they are nearing the finish, when you may give them the linseed. If you give them too many different kinds of seeds they will eat these and will not partake so much of the colour food as they would do if kept only on the plain canary.

Young Birds Moulting.

Down in the Mouth.—There is really no need for you to be so disheartened. You are doing no worse than many others in this abnormal manner. Don't worry more than you can help. Your birds will probably come through better than you expect, to ensure a successful moult, a bird must be strong and healthy, and when it starts moulting must continue throughout from start to finish without a check, commencing down each side of the breast and finishing with the head. After the young birds are taken from their parents I prefer to put them in a light cage, which, I consider, strengthens them. When commencing to moult, cage the best birds off separately, and cover the cage front over at night to keep the birds warm and free from draught. Warmth is the great essential when moulting, and this is also assisted by a moist atmosphere. Give a small quantity of egg food twice a week, to which add a few drops of Parrish's Chemical Food, or add just a pinch of sulphate of iron to the drinking water twice a week. But if a bird is strong and healthy, you need give nothing beyound good sound seed, a few groats occasionally, and egg food twice a week. If you were colour feeding it would be different, but as you object to colour feeding, you save yourself a lot of trouble.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

A Goldfinch Ailing.

F. F. P.—I doubt whether I can advise you anything likely to save your Goldie. If is a serious case when a bird, though well fed and tended, gets thinner and thinner, goes off its food, and gradually wastes away. You cannot do more in the seed line than provide plenty of lightly cracked hemp, maw, niger, teazle, dandelion, etc., with freshly-gathered thistle-heads and groundsel. You should try to get him to eat ants' eggs, damped with new milk, made afresh frequently; likewise, mealworms. The latter (tiny ones), may be pinned down to a perch, or, better still, concealed in a thistle head. Once he gets the "taste" for them, he will eat them freely, when let him have as many as he chooses to consume. The "maggots" found in thistle-heads (especially decayed, or rotten heads), and the blight off sow thistle, would likewise doubtless be helpful. I have known a change on to live food work apparent miracles. I should not give salts; try half a teaspoonful of dandelion juice (from a chemist) in two tablespoonfuls of water, for two days, then a few more doses on alternate days. This treatment may tone him up, bring back the lost appetite, and so pull him round. But the case is a ticklish one. You did quite right to transfer him to a warmed cosy room; but he should not be kept under too hot and close conditions.

Concerning a Hawfinch.

Perplexed.—You could hardly expect to find any red-mite on the white cloth if you covered same with insect powder—the red-mite would be only too anxious to shun it. A plain white cloth should be used. However, it need not necessarily be red-mite, for Hawfinches are notoriously bad subjects to moult in a cage. A good friend of mine, of extensive experience with these bulky Finches, avers it is only the hand-reared ones (or those taken as nestlings) that can be counted as at all certain to moult as they ought to, so to speak. My own experience tells me that Hawfinches are very erratic customers in the matter of moulting. Judging from your letter, you can't very well improve on the way you feed your bird, or on the conditions under which you keep him. I should shift him into a warm room, to a cosy corner, and gradually "sheet down" his cage with a light warm covering, arranging that he may have the bath, or be occasionally lightly sprayed. If you adopt the latter plan, just tinge the water with a few spots of Scrubbs' cloudy ammonia. One Hawfinch I myself had "stuck in the moult." I tried with a "vapour bath." Briefly, I half-filled a bucket with hot water, laid a piece of board (not too wide) across the top, and put the Hawfinch, run into a wire nursery-cage for the purpose, on the latter, throwing a light covering over the whole, and leaving the bird in this position for several minutes. It is a desperate sort of remedy, but it acted in my case, as the old fancier who "put me up to it" predicted it would. One needs, of course, to be very careful the bird does not afterwards take cold; also that he is not overdone with too much and too scalding steam.

Mule or Hybrid?

Novice.—As I have often had occasion to explain in this column, the term "Mule" is really not a correct one to apply to any bird, that being a name claimed by the progeny produced by mating horse with ass. Hybrid is the correct term to apply to all birds produced by the mating of two birds of different species. But "Mule" is a very old name for such birds, and now sanctioned (I had almost written sanctified) by virtue of long usage. The word "Mule," however, is generally accepted as indicating a bird with Canary blood in its veins—thus, a Goldfinch-Canary Mule—while "Hybrid" is accepted as indicating a bird bred from two British birds (or birds other than a Canary)—thus, a Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid. But many fanciers of the old school, old in the keeping of these "freaks and variations," use the two terms indiscriminately, or else call one and all "Mules." There is, you will gather from this, no settled or "correct" way of using one, or both, terms.

Tanning and Sheen on an Exhibition Goldfinch.

Amateur.—I am not certain on the point, but it seems to me you are labouring under a delusion. Tanning, or depth of brown on the chest (also back) and sheen on a Goldfinch, are not produced by any feeding or other methods. In other words, if the Goldie is not naturally good in tanning and sheen, no treatment of its keeper can make it so. Whoever told you the contrary (if someone has done so) told you a lot of pure humbug. But if a Goldie is naturally rich in tan and polished in plumage, then certainly the skilful fancier can bring out those points in the moult to a degree of perfection never (or exceptionally rarely) seen in the wild bird. Birds that are pale in chestnut, and dull in coat, are generally buffs, and these are not the birds to select to moult for exhibition purposes, though it is true that we occasionally see a buff get high up in the prize list in keen competition, but such has to be a remarkably good specimen in other exhibition points. It is the jonquils, the yellows, birds naturally teeming with colour, that are the ideal specimens to moult, if only one can put on them good enough in the other necessary points. If your birds are bulls, as I suspect, from your letter, you will see that you have not the right stuff to get tan and sheen on to perfection. Colour-feeding avails a Goldfinch nothing at all, as, curiously enough, it spoils the blaze colour; a bird that needs pepper feeding is not worth its salt. Regular use of the bath, or regular gentle spraying, is one great thing to perfect the sheen on a bird. Correct feeding, of course, is essential to both plenty of ripe teazle, maw, linseed and canary, with now and again a feed of hemp and niger, and lightly cracked sunflower, also, most important of all, ripe thistle-heads and hard-heads in abundance, with seeding groundsel, and any other wild seeds they show a partiality for. Grubs from thistle-tops, blight from sow thistle, tiny mealworms, and ants' eggs dumped with new milk, are also invaluable items (some birds will eat a little prepared high grade insectivorous food). This will answer all your queries, and should enable you to stage your Goldies in trim good enough for any competition, provided only that the birds are good enough in themselves. Ignore the nonsense you have been told respecting linseed. Give a good supply right through the moult, and especially so towards its close, when also give niger a little more freely. Don't offer much hemp.

Nuthatch and Juniper Berries.

Anxious.—I have known considerable controversy arise over the correct class in which to enter a Nuthatch. It is a "mixed feeder," turning to nuts, etc., when insect life is out of the menu, necessarily, owing to the rigour of winter. However, no bird can logically compete as both granivorous and insectivorous, and you should certainly enter your specimen in the insectivorous classes—its generally accepted place. Few judges would hesitate to "wrong class" a Nuthatch if it appeared in front of them in a class for seed-eating birds. I know very little, from personal experience with them about preserving juniper berries. They could, of course, be preserved in the manner adopted with most bottled, etc., fruits, that is, in syrup. They would also, I feel sure, keep for a long time, if packed amongst sawdust (like imported grapes), and stored in a cool place; or they could be buried in sand. Most berries will keep for a long period if gathered on the branch, the stem of the latter being immersed in a bottle of water, I have personally used all the three last-mentioned methods with success, with privet-berries, blackberries, etc. I generally tinted the water with a few drops of Condy's fluid, this undoubtedly helping to keep them fresh for a longer period than when same is not used. I stored them in a cool, dry cellar, changing the water (when I used it) as necessary.

Bowel Trouble: Wild Seed Mixture.

Thankful.—(1) I could not pretend to guess at the cause of the inflammation from which you say you lost your two birds. Sometimes it is quite impossible to correctly determine, as when, for instance, a bird suddenly goes wrong, and succumbs to what seems like inflammation of the bowels, though being fed precisely as he had been fed the previous two or three years. Death comes to all our pets sooner or later, and we can only bear up as cheerfully as may be. (2) I have seen one or two samples of "wild-seed mixture," the vendors of which have added to the farmer's screenings (composing the bulk) a dash of thistle, dandelion, lettuce, maw, gold of pleasure, etc., seeds. Such mixtures, needless to add, are far superior to those composed solely of the residue from threshing machines—a good deal of which is sometimes simply chaff, and useless rubbish. A mixture of the above-named seeds alone would make a nice 'relish" for Finches. You could add mustard and cress seeds, if you choose. Other seeds of familiar garden-plants very much relished by Finches, are cornflower, golden-rod, and wall-flower. In about equal parts would be the way I should mix the above seeds. (3) Wild seeds in a mixture, i.e., the dry seeds, are in no sense a substitute for greenfood, or even the freshly-gathered seeding-heads of the different plants. Get the latter wherever possible; the wild seed mixture is acceptable when the latter can no longer be obtained.

Young Linnets and Canaries.

Linnet.—Your young Linnets ought to thrive on the following stock mixture: Canary two pints, teazle one pint, summer rape, charlock and linseed a half-pint each, mawseed a quarter-pint. Give also a little lightly-cracked hemp-seed, made fresh daily. Further, offer such ripe wild seeds as plantain, shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel and thistles liberally—you ought to have no difficulty in gathering any or all of them. I should say your Canaries have gone off song preparatory to moulting; probably you will have found feathers about ere reading this answer of mine. Don't try any "remedies," if this is so; the voice will return naturally when the moult is over. A little Parrish's chemical food (obtainable from any chemist) is quite one of the best things to give moulting birds. A half-teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water should be ample, and given every second day (plain water in between). A young hen Canary (i.e., one bred this year), ought not to have very scaly legs and long claws—such things are usually indicative of old age. Still, scales show far more quickly on the legs of some birds than they do on others (of the same kind). Your bird may possess noticeably scaly legs, and yet not be very old—I wouldn't like to pass an opinion without seeing her. You don't say precisely how young she is supposed (or stated) to be. The seller may be someone who does not believe in the "too old at forty" cry. If the hen seems a very staid and quiet lady, you can bet on her being an old bird. Any experienced Canary fancier will tell you whether she is a 1907 bird or not, almost as soon as he looks at her.

Brieflets.

Goldfinches in Somerset (Dido).—I really cannot say whether you can legally catch Goldfinches in Somerset. The regulations are frequently altered to suit different districts (or local hobbies), and the only way for one to be absolutely on the safe side is to enquire at the local police station (or send a stamped addressed envelope there), which will at once secure you the desired information.

What Bird Is It? (Nib).—I don't think the bird you describe is British. A small bird with a shortish tail, bluish-grey beak and legs, nut-brown body (darker underneath), and greyish head, and which has a low "chirpy" note, seems to me likely to be a White-headed Nun. The value is only a couple of shillings or so. It is a very common Foreign bird.

Linnet Loose in Bowels (Min).—This state of things was dealt with at length in last week's issue. Note reply to "No Name," and follow advice given therein.

A Weed (A.C.)—I do not recognise the portion of plant you send, therefore cannot recommend it for Linnets and Goldfinches. If you want it identified, you must forward a fairer sample, with leaves, etc.

Identity of Bird (Sirrom).—The bird you describe is the Spotted Flycatcher—somewhat Robin-like in style and shape (though not so chubby), general colour grey, lighter underneath than on back, with rather distinct wing markings, streaked with black markings on head, neck and breast; beak and legs leaden colour, the latter fairly short. You are right—it is a softbill, and delicate, too, not easy to cater for in captivity. If it commences to droop, I would restore it the liberty it lost in so curious a fashion. I think you are correct in assuming it a young bird.

Lark Not Moulting Well (Tolleross).—You must see that your bird has the opportunity for a dust-bath whenever inclined to take it, and mix some Keating's powder amongst it. Into the soft-food for twelve or fourteen days mix daily as much flowers of sulphur (from a chemist) as will lie on a sixpence. Also do not omit to incorporate some chopped green-stuff with the food—tender clover-grass for choice. Afterwards, until the end of the moult, it might be well to add a little Parrish's Chemical Food to the drinking water daily—say, half a-teaspoonful.

Jay Ailing (F.S.S.).—Instead of so much wheat and sharps in the menu, I would substitute a proportion of soaked dog biscuit. I should think the trouble is due to the moult. Get a bottle of cod-liver oil and hypophosphites from a chemist, and at first mix a few spots amongst its soft-food, gradually increasing the quantity to a teaspoonful. If no apparent improvement in its condition, write me again in a fortnight, detailing principal points of the case.

Spray, not Sponge (Foster-Mother). — In my answer to you last week the printer made me advise you to "lightly sponge" the bird. This, of course, should be "lightly spray."

"On Hard Seed."

Bombadoss.—I don't suppose for a minute the birds were "on hard seed," as you and I interpret that term. The dealers would mean that they were "eating hard seed." A bird needs to have been in captivity several weeks before it can be said to be safely on to hard seed, i.e., the seeds used by bird-keepers. Dealers don't want to keep Goldfinches even several hours if they can help it—they are too apt to die. You couldn't reasonably, at the price you paid, expect cock birds which had been caged several weeks. I sympathise with you to the full. Still, you will, I am sure, wish me to tell you the truth, however hard. I can assure you that genuine cock Goldfinches, either Greypates or in full colour, cannot be bought in London shops at the price you name—and fresh-caught ones, mind you, at that. However, your birds may have been genuine cocks right enough—we needn't discuss that point—but you must remember that a percentage of deaths is inevitable amongst newly-captured birds. Goldfinches, of all species, are certainly not exempt. Note also reply to "Humane," last week.

Concerning a Skylark.

J.C.—If the Skylark has not commenced to shed the tail feathers by the time you read this reply, I should catch him and extract the broken ones. Give a short, sharp pull (holding the bird gently, but firmly), and they will come out easily enough. Mind you do not at the same time lay hold of any of the feathers in the region of the vent—only the actual broken tail feathers. A good dog biscuit makes, when crushed, an excellent basis for a food, but I cannot unreservedly recommend it without the addition of some other ingredients. Thus one breakfasteupful would be immensely improved by the addition of a small tablespoonful each of dried flies and powdered silkworm pupæ (both advertised cheaply in our columns). This would help greatly in getting the bird on song. I don't believe in mixing a lot of seeds amongst the soft food—a little mawseed is all I should allow. A heaping teaspoonful of canary seed can be offered every day in a separate vessel; or varied with groats, coarse oatmeal or crushed hemp. The latter should always be freshly prepared every day, no matter to what bird it is offered. The bird should have four or five mealworms daily, and any other suitable live insects you can lay hands on. Further, vegetable food—such as mashed cold boiled potato, grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, watercress, chickweed, clover-grass, etc.—is a necessity, mixed amongst its soft-food. If your dietary is restricted to just the things mentioned in your letter, little wonder you cannot get the bird to sing.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

A Tall Order.

(1) Can a Nuthatch be shown in the hardbill class at shows? (2) Will either of the following, in good condition, stand a chance on the show-bench, viz., Pope, Grey, Green, Black-throated Cardinals? (3) My cock Gouldian, in lovely condition, has lost a claw. Is it any further use for showing? (4) How can juniper berries be preserved for winter use? (5) Why are foreign birds at many shows only allowed one class, as what chance does an Avadavat stand against parrots, etc.?—"ANXIOUS."

Anxious.—(1) A British bird query, and has been referred to Mr. Weston. (2) I hope the day is not far distant when we shall get classes for the more frequently-kept species, such as a class for Cardinals, a class for Java Sparrows, Zebra Finches, etc.; but all this will take time to bring about. To come back to the Cardinals, it all depends on the company they are in, if in good condition they should have a good chance to catch the judge's eye, if they do not take the premier position. (3) If the judge noticed the deficiency, the missing claw would certainly prejudice its chances, i.e., a bird in not so fine condition, but otherwise perfect, would go above it. (4) I have never preserved these, possibly Mr. Weston, or some of our British bird readers will enlighten you and myself. (5) Mostly lack of support for more classes, and in the majority of such cases gorgeous plumage and fine condition, or, in other words, birds that make a show display carry off most of the prizes. Again, usually one judge makes all the awards, and very frequently he does not know much about foreigners, but he can tell fine condition, etc., and he certainly is quite right to make his awards accordingly.

What Bird?

Can you kindly name the following for me? Beak, pale flesh colour; head, neck and wings, black, with greenish sheen; back and under surface, light salmon; long feathers at back of head. Said to come from Russia. Rough sketch enclosed.—"LOVE."

Love.—It is the rose-coloured Starling (Pastor roseus), it is more frequently described in this country as the Rosy Pastor. This handsome species is a visitor to the British Isles, though not in number, but still fairly regularly. Treatment: A roomy cage, some good, soft food mixture, live insects, fruit berries, and such coarse seeds as it will eat. It is a hardy species, and only needs protection from draught. Its cage must be kept strictly clean. A good, soft food mixture consists of game meal, ants' eggs, fine ground pupæ, and dried flies, in equal parts; make crumbly moist for use. All the above ingredients can be procured through our advertisement columns.

Budgerigars for Profit.

I have a small aviary, and want to breed foreign birds (Budgerigars, etc.), with a view to increase my income. Will you please advise me how to purchase, points of birds, etc., for this object?—"BUDG."

Budg.—I cannot answer for increasing your income, most certainly not with such a small aviary as yours. I do not know if any foreign birds can be bred with the same precision as Canaries, but with only moderate success, Budgerigars should pay their way, even if you get rid of your young birds through the dealers. And to have much prospect of success they must not be crowded. You ought to be able to put up cheaply an aviary after the character of a fowl-run and shed, it must be covered with ½-in. mesh wire netting, and the shed must be well lighted. A good size is 12 by 6 by 7 ft. high, of which the shed portion should be 4 ft., and of the other 8 ft., half should be boarded over the roof and the other half open netting, the whole of the front, except shed portion, to be open wire netting. You could start with, say, three pairs yellow Budgerigars (these command a higher price than the green variety); study our advertisement columns, and get the best you can, each pair from a different breeder. Also a pair of Rosellas Parrakeets, these usually breed freely once they make a start, but only purchase those that are warranted adult, and a true pair, that is, male and female. You may not pay your way the first year, as foreign birds take a little time to settle down, and do not often pair up and start nesting straight away as Canaries do. Once breeding commences with you, they should do more than pay their way, if they do not materially increase your income. Such an aviary as that named above I could erect for about an expenditure of £2 in material, doing the labour part myself. You should also have fair success with pure white Bengalese and Java Sparrows, you could breed these in box cages, minimum 2½ by 1½ by 1½ ft. high. You must not add a number of varieties; if you get a mixed medley, you will find it all going out and little coming in.

Acclimatising Waxbills.

I wish to acclimatise some Waxbills prior to turning them out into my aviary in the spring. How should I feed and treat newly-imported birds? My aviary is 21½ by 8 ft, due south. What will it accommodate? Can I keep one dozen Cordon Bleus in a cage 4 by 2 by 2 ft. during the winter? —H.V.J.

H.V.J.—I cannot recommend newly-imported Cordon Bleus to be kept in a cage in an unheated room during the cold weather. Keep them in a room in which a fire is burning during the day; their cage should be of the box type, but if it is all wire, put a cloth round it at night, but a circular opening, say, 3 in. in diameter, must be cut out of cover at top. It would be better to treat them all so, save the Zebra and Saffron Finches, and Java Sparrows, which would do well enough in the cold room, the two latter would be better caged separately in pairs. Of all the others you could keep a dozen in a cage of the size you name, providing they are kept strictly clean. The aviary would actually accommodate double the number of birds you name, but I find with most of these birds, successful breeding is more probable if one pair only is kept in each enclosure, and I advise the purchasing of two pair each only of the Waxbills, you should certainly save one pair each, from these at any rate, and you could make up the number with pairs of Blue-breasted, St. Helena, and Grey Waxbills; Gouldian, Ruficauda and Long-tailed Grassfinches. In your cages for wintering these birds indoors, supply them with cocoanut shell nest, push a little moss into same, and the birds will use these as night shelters. Diet: Canary, white, spray and French millet, greenfood (fresh lettuce in winter), a little slightly moistened sponge cake, and a few ants' cocoons (best), with clean water for drinking and bathing, and a piece of cuttlefish. Ailing birds should be separated from the healthy and lively ones, and the sickly ones kept warm, with for one day, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia to one ounce of water, to be repeated in a week's time if necessary. A rose spray covered with aphides is very helpful in such cases, as are also one or two small spiders.

Garden Aviary.

(1) In my garden aviary, 20 by 6 by 6 ft., I have had, since June, Whydahs, Weavers, white Javas, various Grassfinches, etc.; which of these, if any, should come in for the winter? (2) Have just procured a female (?) white Java, it is chirruping away lustily; do the hens sing? (3) Please describe the Giant Whydah in colour? I bought one out of colour, there is no change yet; will it come in colour this year? (4) What is the best size and shape of show cages for Tanagers?—H.

H.—(1) All the birds you name should stand the winter in your aviary, i.e., as far as I can definitely say, as I am in ignorance of your locality. As it is their first winter in this country, I should bring in the Bicheno and Lavender Finches. (2) I should say your bird is a male, the female is comparatively silent compared with her mate. Compare their beaks in profile, that of the female is narrower at the base and more tapering than that of the male. (3) In breeding and plumage the Giant Whydah is rich gloss black in plumage, with fine long tail plumes from 15 to 18 inches in length, the wings have a red patch, and the coverts flights, etc., have light edgings. Your bird will not come into colour till next spring. (4) Your best method is to write to the various makers for their lists, size would be ruled by the species, as they vary much in size; the shape I prefer is of the box type, with the wire front bent so), and a good average size is 15 to 18 in. long by 12 in. deep and high. Re my book on Foreign Birds, I have the last chapter yet to write, and for which the publishers are waiting. I hope to complete it shortly.

Grey Parrot.

"Oak Polly.—No wonder the poor bird is ill. Stop these tea and other sops, and diet the bird as under: Boiled corn (this only keeps fresh one day), as soon as it is eating freely of the dry seed mixture, gradually discontinue the boiled corn. Seed mixture, which should form the staple food, two parts canary and white oats, and one part each rice in the husk, hemp, wheat, dari, and white sunflower seed. Give also as extras, and to vary the diet, ripe fruit, plain biscuits (dry), nuts, green food, cuttlefish, grit and water three times a day. Discontinue the chlorate of potassium after you see this reply, but continue the magnesia and chemical food in accordance with previous reply, till the bird is in condition again. I expect it will take some time to undo the mischief of your diet, and I can hardly understand you giving such if you read Cage Birds regularly, for almost weekly the warning is given, "Dou't give tea, coffee, or milk sops, etc."

Grey Parrot Moulting.

"New Reader (Surrey)." You cannot do better than continue the treatment already advised, with the exception that instead of the 1 c.c. in 8 oz., you give it dosed at the rate of one teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water. I should let it go dry at night on each occasion, give only the prescribed water in drinking every third day, and on the other days well clean it, and bring water with Parrish's Chemical Food. Let it be as tepid as the bird will take it, it helps to check looseness of the bowels, and is specially useful during the moult. Otherwise diet as already advised. Am glad to note it is much better, and should say it has got the turn now; let it go out of doors on all genial days, but avoid all draughts; lightly spray it with just chilled water about twice a week, carefully guarding against draught till dry. As regards talking, stop the repetition for a time and keep the bird where it will hear plenty of conversation, it will ultimately talk, but individuals are very variable as to length of time or age at which they begin (see other replies). It is difficult to tell the given age of a bird. When young the iris of the eye is light grey (silvery), in adult birds this is pale yellow. Hope the bird will continue to improve.

Amazon out of Condition.

Bluebeard.—You did quite right to stop the milk sop—this is at the root of all the trouble. Continue the boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day), also keep a supply of the following mixture in its cage: Two parts canary seed and white oats, and one part each hemp, wheat, dari, Indian corn and sunflower seeds; also give, to vary the diet and in extras, nuts (shelled walnuts), greenfood, ripe fruit, plain biscuit, and a little boiled potato (dry). Leave the cuttlefish in its cage, and when that is eaten, supply a fresh piece. By all means put it on the Chemical Food, and otherwise continue your present treatment. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, nor any kind of animal food whatever. Encourage it to take a bath; if it will not do so, lightly spray it, keeping it free from draught till dry. Exercise will be very beneficial for it, and it would be well to have it out of its cage as often as convenient. Some of the feathers have been probably pulled out, consequent upon skin irritation from improper diet; watch the bird closely, and if you find this to be so, spray the parts affected with quassia solution two or three times a week and persevere with this.

Young Amazon Parrot.

Baby Amazon.—Glad to note the treatment has been so effectual, and I am of the opinion the sickness you complain of is merely the lingerings of the old trouble, which will gradually yield to the treatment. In case of any recurrence of running at the nostril, lightly spray the nostrils with diluted glyco-thymoline. Leave off the Parrish's Chemical Food for a fortnight at any rate, and see how matters progress. It would be well at this stage to scald out its cage; this would cleanse away impurities and possible germs, if there has been infection during importation. I should not, like to say a bird was safe till it had been three months in this country, but of course every week lessens the risk of loss; however, I am of the opinion your bird will continue to improve, or it would not have gained in flesh as it has done. In case of any infectious complaint, most certainly there would be risk to other birds in the same room; that is the reason why all new purchases are advised to be kept in quarantine till all signs of indisposition have passed away and then their cages should be thoroughly cleansed before they are admitted to the bird room. I do not remember whether I gave you full details as to diet in my last reply, but you will find them in reply to another correspondent in this issue.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Lizard (Anxious).—This bird died of enlargement of the liver and inflammation of that organ, and also of the lungs and spleen, ending with apoplexy. These are all symptoms of "Bird Fever," and the cage occupied by it should be thoroughly disinfected or boiled, (or burnt). It was a cock bird.

Canary (Meadowcroft).—This bird undoubtedly died of Canary Fever, and the probability is that the other sixteen deaths occurred from the same cause.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

London's Sunday Bird Market (W. H. T., Sleaford).—London's Sunday bird market (of many other things besides birds, however) is held in Sclater Street, Shoreditch. Any Shoreditch 'bus (motor or horse) running from the West End, along Holborn, or the Strand, will set you down at the corner of Bethnal Green Road, along which Sclater Street is some hundred yards or so. The best time to go is about 11 o'clock, or mid-day. It is certainly a strange sight; and if you decide to see it, and adventure among the motley crowd down "Club Row," well, don't wear any diamond scarf-pins, or the like. Have no record of any singing contest; enquiry of one or other of the dealers down there might put you on the track of one. It is hardly the season for them yet.

Dead Budgerigars (E. W.).—If you will kindly refer to Post-mortem Rules, you will see that dead bodies should be sent direct to Mr. J. North, of Reading, with the necessary fee. We do not give opinions at this office as to causes of death.

Canary Breeding Competition (B. Wharton).—Having had your results duly authenticated, you are certainly at liberty to sell any of the young birds you bred last season. Thanks for offer re cards.

Small Classification (Sleaford). — If you desire to just double the number of classes given last year, then you will find it difficult to beat the following:—Class 1, Norwich Plainhead, A.V., Yellow; 2, ditto, buff; 3, Yorkshire A.V.; 4, A.O.V. Canary; 5, Mule or Hybrid; 6, British Goldfinch, Bullfinch or Linnet; 7, A.O.S. British; 8, Foreign A.V.

Advice Needed (F. J. R.).—Thanks very much; could not lay hands on correspondent's address, but reproduce your sketches, etc., this week.

Three Photographs (W. Farquhar).—Accept our thanks for the three photographs, which we shall hope to use in the near future.

Subscription (D. B. Montreal, Canada).—The date you ask for is September 14th.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION.

Show Dates and Subscriptions Wanted.

SIR,—I shall be pleased to receive the subscriptions now due from all Societies affiliating to the Cage Bird Union, with a list of their members, and also the date of their show, in order to avoid clashing, as numerous applications for licences are now being made.

THE CLEAR AND TICKED QUESTION.

SIR,—As the show season is fast approaching, it has struck me whether it would not be a good plan if exhibitors were to state in their entry form where a "tick" is located when there appears likely to be any doubt. In short, when a judge came to a bird that aroused his suspicion, the steward could then ask the secretary to refer to the entry form, which would save all the punishment the bird might be subjected to in the search for his tick, which frequently results in the loss of flight or tail feathers, thus upsetting his career for the season. W. SPILLMAN.

GREENFINCH-BULLFINCH HYBRIDS BRED AT BLACKBURN.

SIR,—I am very pleased to inform you that I have been successful in obtaining the Greenfinch-Bullfinch cross by mating a Greenfinch cock to a Bullfinch hen. I have got three young, one four weeks old, hatched and brought up by a Canary hen, and two one week old at the time of writing. These two are being brought up by their own parents. I might add that there are thousands of passers-by within a few yards of the old birds. I hope this will interest your readers, and anyone it will be convenient to may call and see them with pleasure.

WELSH CAGE BIRD CLUB.

The Season's Patronage.

SIR,—All societies requiring the club's patronage are requested to apply for same at once, as the committee will be meeting in a few days to decide what shows they will support. Applicants must give date of show, also name of judge or judges. The club has three cups and a £1 1s. teapot, besides specially designed medals, offered for competition amongst its members. Will the members who have not paid their subscriptions for this year kindly do so at once. Any fancier wishing to join the club must send on his name and address, together with the annual subscription, 2s. 6d., as early as possible, to enable me to place his name before the committee. The committee would like to see more fanciers joining from the North, also applications for the club's patronage.

YOUNG BIRDS DYING AND THE CAUSE.

SIR,—I think a good many of your readers lose young birds from the time they are six weeks old to October 1st, dying in very much the same way, viz., first day puffy, second day like a ball, remaining days with head tucked in as if sleeping, and found, lastly, on the cage bottom dead. On examination the breast bone is sharp and the abdomen looks swollen and disordered. I think this trouble is brought on by improper feeding. During the time mentioned above I give neither green food nor egg food, and feed on canary and rape seeds, the bulk being canary, with every other day a teaspoonful of condition seed. If condition seed is a conditioner of Canaries, why should it not strengthen and invigorate the young, and pull them through the moult, keeping them tight and glossy in feather? If they don't live on this, which is their natural seed, they certainly won't live on egg, bread, and greens. Of course, in October you can come back to the usual tit-bits, sweet apple, watercress, egg food, and condition seed, using them sparingly, so as not to bring the birds too forward in condition. When feeding young I use watercress (when that gets a bit scarce I use lettuce), egg food, and crushed hemp (plenty of it). My birds are only songsters, being Germans, German-Norwich, German-Yorkshire crosses. Being a novice, if my feeding is wrong, I should be pleased to hear of it. I have only lost two birds this season off the sticks out of 25. I have only the German cock left for training purposes. Was sold out months back; have only to hang the birds outside and they sell themselves by their song.

LATE NESTING OF LINNETS.

SIR,—I was taking a walk round the garden this morning, August 30th, where I am employed, and on looking at a rustic arch, which is covered by climbing roses, I discovered a Linnet's nest, and I found the old bird sitting very close on four eggs. Is this not very late? I shall watch it carefully, and see what comes of it. I thought this would be of interest to readers of CAGE BIRDS.

INFORMATION ON CATCHING WANTED.

SIR,—I have been a reader of CAGE BIRDS for the last five years, and have been much interested in several articles on catching birds which have appeared from time to time, but most of these, with the exception of one on the Spanish method of catching Goldfinches, have explained how to catch birds with nets only. As nets are more useful to those who catch large numbers of birds rather than for those who want a few Finches for singing or breeding purposes, could some reader give a few hints on how to catch Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and Linnets with bird lime? Some people use comparatively thick twigs for the lime, while others use very thin ones, lightly fixed on to stouter ones by means of a slit in the end. Is either of these the best way of setting them? Also can Goldfinches and Linnets be caught in a trap cage, and, if so, what is the best bait for them? Any information would be much appreciated.

COLONIST.

DEATH AMONG FOREIGN BIRDS.

SIR,—The cause of early death among newly-imported foreign birds has always been more or less a matter of controversy. The tameness of small foreign birds often offered for sale by foreigners has been asserted to be due in some cases to cramming the birds, in a sense, with grit loaded with very fine shot, so that the apparent tameness of the little sufferer was nothing less than the agonies of acute indigestion (or something worse), and merely a prelude to an exit to another sphere. Another very old chestnut which has been revived is that the cause of death among grey Parrots is the result of their captor feeding them on pounded glass prior to their despatch for this country. Of course, such a cause might easily have been discovered long ago by a systematic method of post-morten on the birds that died soon after leaving the native lands, or immediately after their arrival in this country. It is too much to hope that English dealers and importers will take the trouble to ascertain whether this is the cause of many deaths of birds in their hands? There is certainly some serious flaws in the so-called evidence. One would naturally expect the vast majority of birds to die en route, and then the symptoms of the birds' illness after arrival are scarcely what one would expect from such a cause. AVIC.

IN-BREEDING.

Has it Injured the Scotch Fancy?

SIR,—On looking through my CAGE BIRDS, dated August 3rd, I see one signing himself "A Scotch Fancy Canary Breeder" gives a few very uncomplimentary remarks about our bird, the Scotch Fancy. He complains about them being bad breeders and feeders, and the reason he gives for it is sib-breeding. Now, let me tell him that in-breeding, if done in a systematical way, will not injure their breeding nor feeding qualities. If he is careful in selecting the healthiest and strongest specimens he breeds, he will both improve the quality and maintain the size, a point most essential in a Scotch bird. I maintain that all varieties of exhibition birds are sib-bred more or less. Another thing he complains about is the high price that is asked for a good bird. He can't breed one, yet he goes to a fancier and expects to get the pick of his stock at a low price, and because he can't buy a good bird cheap to improve his stock, he sells out. These are his words: "Happy is the man who sells out when he sees his stock is on the wane." That is a poor spirit; in fact, his letter all through is damaging to the interests of the Scotch birds. I have just finished the season with 40 strong, big, and healthy young Scotch Fancies from four cocks and five hens.

WEST BROMWICH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Permanent Meeting House.

SIR,—Our Society having decided to remove to more suitable rooms, a few of the members visited several rooms in the district, and at the last meeting each room was described and terms discussed; and as a result the Dartmouth Hotel was selected for our permanent meeting room in future. Our room is away from the public part of the house, and is approached by a private entrance in Spon-lane, and this is a great consideration. On the other hand, had we had to go through the public part, it no doubt would have made against our Society. The room is large and very comfortable, is lighted well with electric light, and is suitable for a large show. There is a screen across the room, so that it can be converted into an any-sized room that is wanted, which is also very handy. We feel greatly indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Green for their kindness in lending us their room absolutely free of cost to form the Society and hold our meetings there.

SKYLARKS BREEDING IN AN AVIARY.

SIR,—As requested by your Mr. Weston, who, when answering my query with reference to Skylarks breeding in aviary, told me to let you know the result, I will now inform your readers how it turned out. As I stated in the query, the aviary is only a small structure, made of match-boarding, like a large box cage. It has a double front of ½in. mesh wire netting, to keep away cats, etc. It is 6ft. long, 3ft. from front to back, 3ft. high in front, and 2ft. 6in. high in back. As I stated, the hen laid three eggs. I may say she sat splendidly the whole time of incubation, two of the eggs proving fertile and one clear; but owing to some mishap on their part, one of the fertile eggs got out of the nest a few days before they were due to hatch, so that the young one was dead in shell, but the other one hatched out all right, a fine strong bird. As instructed, I put a large supply of live insect food for them, but for some reason that I cannot account for, the hen would not feed, with the result that the young one died the next day, and that has concluded their breeding for this year, for the hen dropped into moult shortly afterwards. So you will see I have not a very glowing account to give from a professional point of view, but as it was the first attempt by a novice at the game, I think I got on very well. I mean to try again next season, if I myself and the birds shall be alive and well when the proper time arrives.

THOMAS HORTON (Brithdir).

THE SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB'S PATRONAGE.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a little space in which to thank Mr. Rennie very much for his courteous letter on the subject of the Southern Yorkshire C.C. patronage. I still hold, however, to my previously expressed opinion that a better arrangement could have been made, and that a railway journey of 460 miles and the excitement of two shows in four consecutive days is too much of a strain upon the constitution of any bird. I would add that I am in perfect agreement with Mr. Rennie that shows should be "extended over the season." Hence I think the support of the S.Y.C.C. should have been given to a club the date of whose show was not so close to that of Plymouth, so as to have given the birds a chance to recuperate after the fatigues of one show before being despatched to the other. With reference to the letter signed "Frost and Snow," I sincerely wish the writer had appended his name: then we should know where we are. Why the reason for anonymity in a matter of this sort I cannot comprehend. However, I fail to see, because I am compelled by the rules governing the Fancy, to exhibit as a novice that has anything at all to do with the question at issue. "Frost and Snow" would do well to remember that every breeder of birds is not necessarily an exhibitor, any more than every exhibitor is perforce a breeder. A man with a lifelong experience with birds would still be termed a novice when first placing his stock on the show bench, whereas a fancier with a comparatively short connection with the hobby would be styled a champion providing, of course, he were lucky enough to win the necessary "Firsts" to qualify him for inclusion in that section. I have known the power of the money bag to do this latter. Therefore, I think it will be seen that some so-called novices might possess quite as ripe a judgment in birdy matters as many so-styled champions, and there can be nothing to be ashamed of in being "only a novice" as "Frost and Snow" terms it. It is very kind of "Frost and Snow to state my winnings in the Southern Yorkshire Canary Club competitions last season, but anyone interested in these could find them, together with my other honours, in CAGE BIRDS' Annual (Part II). Why should he presume to know, may I ask, that I did not contemplate showing my birds in the champion section this season? Certain eventualities might possibly necessitate my doing so. Hence the matter does very much concern me individually. Apart from this, however, I would inform "Frost and Snow" that I claim the right to criticise the action of any club to which I have the honour to belong, on the broad principle that healthy, honest criticism works for the common good. How does he think the work in our great administrative departments would be conducted if it were not that they were kept up to the mark by the public Press? Why, we should soon have a veritable Tammany created in our midst. I totally deny his assertion that there is any veiled innuendo in my letter that partiality has been shown. As I said before, I had no intention to take up the cause of any particular club, but spoke entirely in the interests of the bird. There is another point. If the South London club "Frost and Snow" refers to is one and the same that I hinted at, then I may tell him it is begging the question for him to say that the club would, in his opinion, have had the S.Y.C.C. patronage "if they had engaged a specialist Yorkshire judge, instead of a Norwich judge." The judge engaged for Yorkshires by the Society in question is an honoured member of the Southern Yorkshire C.C., whose opinion should certainly be worth having, even by our friend "Frost and Snow." At any rate, the judge is considered good enough for that eminent Society, the Yorkshire Canary Club, and that is sufficient for

JOHN B. WATERMAN.

SIR,—I have been greatly interested in the correspondence re the patronage of the S.Y.C.C., and must, in common with others, think Mr. Rennie's reply a very fair one. As much cannot be said of "Frost and Snow." To commence his tirade with a sarcastic reference to a novice's performances does not say much for that gentleman's calibre, and to say that it does not concern Mr. Waterman individually, seeing he is a respected member of the S.Y.C.C., is, to say the least, very bad grace. It is very plain to a casual observer that Mr. Waterman's sole object was thought and love for the bird he so greatly admires. To say that there was a veiled innuendo is mere presumption on his part. Mr. Waterman is a member of several societies in London, and if he refers to any particular Society (which I don't think he does), he has perhaps good grounds for his insinuation, for clique-ism is well known to exist in the S.Y.C.C., and kissing goes by favour. THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND NON-UNION SHOWS.

SIR,—In answer to the letter of C. Crane, members of the Union exhibiting at a non-union show are liable to be suspended from exhibiting at any C.B.U. shows. It thus behoves all exhibitors to see that the shows they wish to exhibit at are held under the Union's rules. Such shows will be duly advertised, and the schedules must contain the show rules. Fanciers are warned against assuming that a show is held under C.B.U. rules unless these appear in the schedules, and we ask our members to co-operate in furthering the Union by urging all shows not already affiliated to become so, or obtain a licence for the show, and thus command the entries of all Union members, which otherwise they would be deprived of.

MICE IN THE CAGES.

SIR,—Could any of your numerous readers of CAGE BIRDS inform me how to prevent mice from getting in cages. I have a rack holding 12 breeding cages, three tiers high, four in a row, and the bottom row is 12 inches from the floor. I have the six supports of the rack one foot from the floor, wrapped with tin; then I have got six pieces of tin 10 inches square, and cut a square hole in the centre and fastened them to act as a flange one foot from the floor, but still the mice get up into the cages. I have also tried them with the rack fully one foot from the walls, and yet they still get up into the cages. I should be also obliged if any reader could tell me the best and quickest way to get rid of them, as when I look in at night I generally find a few running about. I have made up their holes with tin, but they come out in other places. I should be exceedingly glad for any advice how to get rid of them.

Superbly illustrated by the Champion Canary Artist Mr. H. NORMAN. EVERY BIRD DEPICTED IS A VERITABLE MODEL, and shows the breeder what to aim for. Some idea of the popularity of this Practical Manual may be gathered from the fact that under the title of "The British Canary," it has passed its Third Edition, entering upon a Fourth Edition of 5,000 copies under the new title of "HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL." MR. HOUSE has thoroughly revised and brought this work up-to-date and incorporated a chapter on the "Roller or Singing Canary."

SWEATING HENS.

Mr. Crisp Raises a Novel Point.

SIR,—I have read Mr. Cutmore's interesting lecture with much pleasure. To me, as a fancier, he raises an extremely important point when he states "that in birds the skin is not an excretory organ." I do not in the least doubt such an excellent authority, but I should be deeply grateful if he would give us his views on what are known in the fancy as "sweating hens." I crave this information in the hope that it may be helpful to many who breed Canaries. R. L. CRISP.

PORTH'S ALIVE!

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space in your valuable paper to try and help a brother fancier of Pandy out of his trouble. I do feel for the Pandy Society that the members are leaving it to go to a standstill. But there are hopes yet for brother fanciers. If they do not start again at Tonypandy, I give them one and all a hearty invitation to join the Porth and District C.B.F. Society, which is only two miles from Pandy. I would be pleased to hear from any fancier wishing to join our ranks at Porth.

THE LITTLE OWL.

SIR,—Since my last letter appeared in CAGE BIRDS I have had several letters from fanciers respecting them. My letter not appearing in print until nearly two months after I wrote it, several thought that the owls were still in my friend's possession. It is very singular, but they were all cleared out in less than a fortnight, most of them going through a dealer to large gentlemen's estates. Twelve of them went to Cornwall to be turned out in a park. At the time I received the letters I was not able to get any more, as they are early and prolific breeders. If any of your readers would like some another season I must know early. Since my illness I have had little sleep at nights, and I can hear them by their calls in all directions, which shows that they are very plentiful in this district.

THE ENGLISH AND WELSH BORDER FANCY CLUBS.

SIR,—Patronage has been given to the following shows:—Northern Division: October 18-19, Newcastle; October 25-26, Manchester; November 6-7, Morecambe; November 15-16, Whitehaven; December 6-7, Carlisle; 13-14, International Contest at Gateshead; January 10-11, 1908, St. Helens. Southern Division: October 17-18, Dulwich; October 30-31, Welsh National; Novemher 6-7, Swansea; November 20-21, Bristol; December 6-7, L.C.B.A.; December 13-14, International Contest, Gateshead; January 14, 1908, Llanelly; January 31 to February 4, Palace. There is room for a few more shows in each division so long as they do not occur in the same week as those scheduled above. The secretary will be glad to hear from any member who wishes to subscribe to the cups or international specials. A cup will be provided for competition in each division (as well as the cash specials), and donations can be paid to the district committeeman, or sent direct to the secretary.

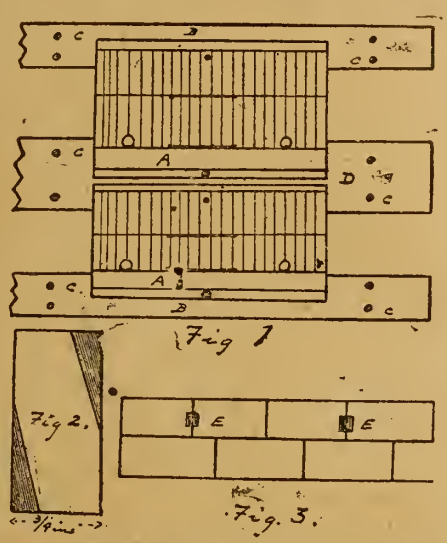
A LINNET WHICH RETURNED TO ITS CAGE.

A Day Out.

SIR,—I have a house-moulted Linnet which I have had about 18 months. My hird-room is over the scullery, where I kept this Linnet in a box cage. I very often let him fly about the room, and put a perch between the wires so that he can go in and out, which he does himself. However, I thought I would give him his liberty to-day, and, placing my hand over the door, I carried the cage and put it on the back-room window-sill. As soon as I withdrew my hand the bird bolted, alighting on the top of the row of houses opposite, and thence flying on to the chimney, where I lost sight of him. A thought struck me to hang my other Linnet out of the window, which I did, and he and the one let free were soon calling and singing to each other. The latter then made another fly. I thought he was off over our houses, but he must have let on them, for he was back in three hours, and on the window-sill, then on the cage door. But he did not go in—he flew away again, returning once more in two hours to his cage. I stood in the backyard for some time, and when I saw him go in his cage I went upstairs and placed my hand over the cage door, and took him hack to the bird-room. This Linnet has not been hung outside this summer, and the other Linnet I keep in a different part of the house. The bird in question was in good feather, and well able to reach the fields. He was let go at 1 p.m. and caged again at 6.30 p.m. I have read in CAGE BIRDS hefore of wild birds returning to their cage after being released. I think this time it was the other Linnet singing that fetched him back. I would like to thank you for the valuable information I have received from your paper. H. HAY.



ADVICE NEEDED.

A Plague of Mice.

SIR,—In reply to the query from "Avalon" re plague of mice, I would say that if the mice come through the wall only where the cages hang, the best way to obviate that nuisance would be to zinc sheet that wall, and if the floor is concreted also there would be an end of the trouble, I am sure. I used to be troubled by rats and mice also. I had the walls of my room lined with corrugated zinc, drilling a hole where a nail was required. The floor was also concreted, and the enemies disappeared and sought their food elsewhere. Many thanks for valuable help through CAGE BIRDS. GRATTAN BRAY.

SIR,—If "Avalon" will try a tube of Virus, advertised in CAGE BIRDS, I can, without doubt, say that it will clear his room entirely of mice. A friend of mine has used it with very good results. Why not plaster all holes up, and build a stack of shelves to rest the cages on? R. E. SIMPSON.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Avalon," judging from his letter in last week's issue, is not to be envied. He wants some advice on fixing his cages to a brick wall, so as to leave no holes in the latter through which the mice can enter from the bakehouse next door to him. I hope this letter may be of help to him, and save him some young birds. The enclosed sketches will aid in explaining to "Avalon" how I should do the job. The top board should be made of about 3½in. x ⅞-in. floor-board, which would answer capitally. If the wall is in good condition, find joints in the brickwork by driving in a bradawl, and then cut out holes with a plugging chisel. If you haven't one of these, any bricklayer will lend you one for a trifle. Now, make some wood plugs. Take off the opposite corners, as shown in sketch, as this makes them bite into the wall much better. You will want to plug wall at about every three feet. Drive in the plugs, and then cut them off level with the plaster. Make a pencil mark to show where your plugs are (as the board should cover them). You can now either screw the boards to the plugs or nail them. Boards ⅞ths of an inch thick are plenty strong enough. I cannot quite see how the mice can get through when you have nailed the boards to the wall, but if you cement all the holes up, it then becomes impossible. You could put some screws into the boards to hang the cages on. When you cement up the holes, damp them well first, or the cement won't hold. If your correspondent wants any further advice, and cares to drop a line to CAGE BIRDS, I will do my best to help.

F. J. ROOK.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space to reply to "Avalon" re mice pest. I am a baker, and have my bird-room attached to the flour-room, so you may guess I had plenty of mice. I tried everything possible to get rid of them, but of no use; so, having a good cat, I thought I would try and train her to the bird-room. I put a Canary in a cage on the floor, and then put the cat in. Of course, I was watching her movements. She went straight for the bird, and I went for her, and rubbed her nose against the bars of the cage. That was quite enough for her; she will now sit in the bird-room any length of time and not touch the birds, and woebetide Mr. Mouse if he appears in sight. If "Avalon" will do this he will soon get rid of the mice pest. CENARTH.

BREEDING BULLFINCHES IN A CAGE.

SIR,—I wrote you on the 10th of June to ask if Bullfinches had been bred in the house, and your Mr. Weston told me but seldom. I told you I had some young ones, but I did not know how many. They were hatched on the 4th of June, but died on the 14th two young from four eggs. However, the hen began to nest again. I had on the 5th of July three young from four eggs. Of this, the second nest, one died on the 20th of July, one happened on an accident, and one is now living. From the third nest I had hatched on the 8th or 9th of August, five birds out of five eggs, and all are living yet, and on the sticks. All the above mentioned young Bullfinches were bred in the same room with Canaries. JOSHUA TAYLOR.

MOON-STRUCK BIRDS.

A Novel Experience.

SIR,—On the morning of the 27th of August I was startled from my sleep at 1.35 a.m. by a great commotion amongst by birds, which are in the room next to my bedroom; the whole of them were in a state of great agitation. On getting out of bed, and going to the room, I found something unusual had happened. I thought a cat had by some means got into the room, as the window was wide open, but could not find any signs of a cat. I found, however, that the moon had just got in the window in full blaze. This was the cause of the commotion. I covered up the light and left them. I did not examine any of the cages, as it was too dark; but the next morning, on visiting them before six a.m., I was not only surprised, but astonished, to find four of them dead, lying at the bottom of the cages, with their wings wide open. They had probably died from fright. No doubt one or two birds started the commotion, which upset the rest, and had I not arrived when I did, and darkened the window, I should probably have lost more. Never in all my experience of over 30 years had I had such an occurrence. The window in the room faces due south. The next day the birds were all as wild as could be, and nothing would seem to settle them until I kept the windows covered up for a few days. I thought this note might interest some of your readers, and they might profit by it. In the room there were British birds of all kinds, and Canaries. The British Birds no doubt started the commotion, as they are the most restless at nights. One of the four which died was a Roller Canary, another a two years' old Greenfinch, another a cock Linnet, and the fourth a cock Goldfinch; all the British birds had been in cages over 12 months. MOON-STRUCK.

THE SCOTCH FANCY CANARY MODEL.

Loose or Tight Feathered, which?

SIR,—I have just returned from holidaying, and have not had an opportunity of seeing my copies of CAGE BIRDS for August 3rd and 10th till now. "Advocate's" letters on the Model question are, as usual, very far from the point at issue, and are bristling with matters of a personal nature, and veiled insult. As for his nom de plume, he certainly deserves credit for its selection, he has proved himself worthy of it, and I have no doubt has earned Mr. Wright's appreciation of his efforts on behalf of this particular Model. Does "Advocate" really mean all he writes? I venture to say No. If I am wrong, then he has much to answer for, and much to regret. "Advocate" says only two objected to the adoption of the Model. May I ask how many were there at the moment, either to object or sanction, and who were the two gentlemen who objected? No doubt they felt disappointed at the manner in which the whole business was being conducted. It would be interesting matter to read if these same two gentlemen would favour those interested with their experience of how this Model was adopted. "Advocate" says Mr. Wright's model is in demand everywhere. What does he mean? There is some mistake here. I can assure "Advocate" that outside "the circle" the Model has many objectors. "Advocate" would have done much for Mr. Wright's Model if he had let it alone, for by his misleading and inaccurate statements in connection with it, he has brought out details which would have been much better left alone. I am more than surprised that, with one exception, no member of the committee on the Model question has had the courage to answer the few vital questions which, through CAGE BIRDS, have been put to them, or in any way enlightened those who voted them to their position on that committee. Breeders of intellect and common sense, have drawn their own inferences from their studied silence on the subject. Mr. Harrison, of whom I have a very slight acquaintance, having only met the gentleman once to speak to and that many months ago, deserves credit, and has my warmest thanks for his candid and explicit details of his conduct as a member of this now famous committee. He has given those who had, and still have, a special interest on the subject of a Standard Model most earnestly at heart, a most interesting history of this mode of working of the committee of which he himself was a member, and which has been the means of raising the ire or displeasure of "Advocate" and his few friends, who have made a very feeble attempt to champion their cause. I hope, should the latter gentleman write any more on the subject, that he will leave his sarcastic ability on one side, and give us some practical information. Let it be original and serviceable. The question of a standard model for Scotch Fancy will again be brought to the front, and let us hope with better results than has attended the efforts put forth on this occasion. There is not the shadow of a doubt but that a standard is required, and a model adopting as a guide to breeders of the Scotch Fancy Canary in either Scotland, Ireland, or England, wherever it is bred. How some judges come to recognise some of the specimens placed on the show bench, and classed as Scotch Fancies, is a puzzle to "Piebald," and many others. Certainly, they were Fancies, truly so, but not Scotch Fancies. Nothing but a mass of loose feathers, nicely groomed, covering a skeleton frame. Perhaps an impossible exhibit for any judge to give an award on proper grounds, or according to the relative points of what, in the minds of many breeders, goes to constitute an almost perfect specimen of an ideal "Scotch Fancy." Many birds have been placed in the same classes to compete with what I have just described, and to their owners' chagrin have been relegated out of the awards. For what reason has never been properly explained. Personally, the only reason I could adduce for it was, pandering to the taste of a limited circle, but a strong one. To wit. On the one hand, here is a bird staged, competing and classed as a Scotch Fancy, but in such a condition of loose feathers that it is a sheer impossibility to know what is underneath the mass of loose feather, or to know, or judge it properly against its neighbour, which has been placed in the prize list, second, or, perhaps, third, and had everything to commend it as a truer type of Scotch Fancy than the other. Being tight in feather, the different points of merit in handling were easily judged, but it lacked looseness of feather which, in the eyes of some judges, was fatal to its success. Why? I ask. There is no comparison between the two birds, and the loose-feathered birds should have a class for themselves, and if judges (there are exceptions) would take courage, and judge according to standard, such specimens would be placed outside the prize list entirely. They certainly have no claim to be called in any sense Scotch Fancies, but lay strong claim to be called Dutch Fancies, of which their composition appears to be made up to a very fair extent. As the show season is fast approaching, speculation is rife in many quarters as to what will be the class of bird to lead the race this season. Loose or tight feathered. Which? Many breeders of standing in the Scotch Fancy world will watch the judges' awards with a critical eye, more so than on any former occasion. Now Mr. Editor, I shall not trouble you again for some time to come, as my business will not permit, but I take this opportunity of thanking you for permitting me to address those interested on the subject of a Scotch Fancy Model through the medium of your excellent paper, CAGE BIRDS, which has now established itself in the minds of your friends in Scotland as indispensable in the homes of the breeders of the Scotch Fancy. Random Notes on Hybrids and Mules.

Some Interesting Experiences Detailed.

By T. H. KINCH.

I am glad to say that there are plenty of Goldfinch Canary Mules about. One man has bred seven or eight in two nests, but they are only small birds, and none would be good enough for the Show Bench. They are, however, thought something of by the breeder and his friends. This is, no doubt, most encouraging to breeders who are only just commencing, as this breeder has only tried his cross for the first time this year; it will, no doubt, lead to others trying next year, and it is quite possible they may succeed, if us old hands fail. The breeder in question put together a pair in a small cage at first, as he had no other, and after he told me what they were doing, I advised him to get a box and some wire netting, and make a larger cage. The results have turned out trumps. The reason I have mentioned this is, that it might encourage the young fanciers to start, and have a try without any expense at all. I can assure you, my young friend is quite proud of his success at the first time of trying. A friend of mine had a Bullio hen, which has laid over 40 eggs in two years, and although some were good, the greater proportion were not fertilized. She was up with a Canary. They paired last year, and again this, but I am sorry to record all have been lost; every care was taken of the eggs. They were placed under Canaries, but strange to say the Canaries rejected them, and they would not have them at any price, and smashed the lot. Why? They could not tell the difference because the eggs were so near alike. This smashing, I cannot account for. The eggs were of the same date, and helped to fill up the nest. Under another Canary hen, I placed two Greenfinches' eggs. These were left and brought up. Another Canary hen has hatched and brought up two Linnets with her own young. The reason why these eggs were refused and rejected I will leave to others to solve. I suppose it was because we had such great hopes, and were certain that one or two would come out trumps.

CHAFFINCH AND BULLFINCH CROSS.

Another cross which we have tried is the Chaffinch and Bullfinch. I say we, because I am in touch with several friends who I have started, who come to me for advice, and who give me full details of their experiences. I do not approve of the cross, or I might say the selection of the birds; but as so many hen Bullies were caught here last winter, I advised them all to try. A boy caught two hen Bullies in a hedge during one of the sharp hoar frosts, and brought them to me, but they only lived two or three days. We tried this cross with a cock Chaffinch caught in November, and the hen Bullie. This cross, I might say, is nearly impossible, but there is nothing like having a try. You never know what birds will do in confinement; at any rate, the Bullie has laid two eggs; the results desired may come later on. It is rather singular that the hen Bullie has been run on so much this last year or two, particularly about this district. It may have been the Canary Bullie Hybrids which have started it. A few years ago no one would have a hen Bullie at any price, but now they are all the craze, and you cannot get them so cheap as the cocks about here. Rather strange to say, no nests of the Bullies have been recorded near this town, Ramsey, and very few Goldfinches. Last year they were fairly numerous. It is just possible that they build further away in the fields and plantations, which are now more preserved than previously.

HAWFINCH AND BULLFINCH.

I have now to mention a cross between the Hawfinch and Bullfinch. This is, I think, the only one about this district, and strange to say, a novice has them. The Hawfinch was purchased, and is a good specimen of its kind, the Bullie hen was caught about here in October last. They have been in a large flight outside. The Bullie has laid three or four eggs, but only two have been saved, which have been placed under a wild bird in a garden, I believe a Greenfinch, but I am not quite sure at present. These eggs were marked, and two of the Bullies' own taken out; they are due to hatch in about eight days' time. This is a great risk to run, to place valuable eggs out in a garden but we never know what may happen. This was the only chance, for they were placed there before he told me, and I strongly advised him to let them stay; although, what with vermin and boys, they may never have a chance. I am assuming that the eggs are good, which may not be the case. How many eggs are good from Hybrids? We never know, that's where the excitement comes in when we get one, and try to do our best to get it raised. If you can depend upon the eggs being left alone, nature will and can do a lot, if you can find suitable nests, and they are safe from vermin and boys, the young would, no doubt, be stronger and larger grown.

THE NESTING OF THE GOLDFINCH.

For instance, I know of a nest of young Goldfinches, which have been hand-reared from about 14 days, they are the smallest and most miserable lot I have yet seen. Another nest of young Goldies which have been caged out in the open for the parents to feed, are nearly as large again. Still, I must say that the Goldfinches we have about here, and they are not many, are very small. Would this be from their continual in-breeding in the wild state, which, of course, must take place, as they generally return each year, either old or young, to the same garden, but don't always select the same trees for the breeding season. At the present time, there are now several nests, which have escaped both egg collectors and fanciers, flying about with their parents. I dare say they will yet have another nest; they were very late in this district this year, before they started to build. Two years ago, I heard speak of a pair of Goldfinches having three nests in the year. I think this is the only case I have ever heard of. With this exception, I have never known of more than two nests. The first nest was found in May with eggs, which is very early for these birds. All three nests were taken, and raised. The last nest only had three eggs in, and only two hatched. This is not Hybrid breeding, but it is how the material comes for Hybrid breeding. A note yesterday, tells me that a friend had got a wild-caught Hybrid, a large bird, nearly the size of a Greenfinch, with the Goldfinch yellow in its wings. I have not as yet seen the bird, but I am quite anxious to see it. I cannot as yet, think that birds at large go contrary to nature, and breed with other species. What they do in cages under unnatural treatment is quite different. If there is this one, where are the others? No others have been seen, although the place has been watched for days and days. I expect it will prove a Greenfinch, which has "sported."

BRAMBLEFINCH-CHAFFINCH EGGS.

I have just heard of some eggs of this Bramblefinch-Chaffinch, four, I believe. These have been placed out of doors in a hedgerow, under a Chaffinch; they are due to hatch at any time, that is, if they are good, but my friend would not disturb them, and has only watched them from a distance. I have just had four young Goldfinch-Canary Mules brought in for me to see, they would be about eight weeks old; they had left the parents and were doing nicely for themselves. The last three or four days they began to show signs of illness, and died, wasted away, nothing but one mass of bone. I had no chance to try to save them, for I did not know until they were nearly dead. Lots of instances have there been this year, about here, of both British birds and Canaries going light. They appear to feed well, and are always hungry, but yet they are starving. I am beginning to think it is the Bird Plague again, or if not, some new disease. I noticed in CAGE BIRDS of July 13th, that well-known Fancier of Liverpool, Mr. Williams suggesting the giving a drop of brandy in the beak. Well, I did not use brandy, but I did give a drop of whiskey. I wanted my friend to send them up for a postmortem to find out the cause of death.

Delicate Birds and their Keeping.

Some Puzzles and their Possible Solution.

By F. FINN, B.A., F.Z.S., Etc.

One of the greatest puzzles—I may add one of the greatest annoyances—of the aviculturist who likes to keep a variety of birds lies in the delicacy of some species. There are some birds which, if you put them on an ordinary seed mixture suiting their type of feathered creature, or on one of the "good stock mixtures" for soft bills, if they happen to be of that persuasion, will thrive apace, while others will incontinently die off with greater or less expedition.

Pioneer Aviculture.

Now, it has long been my conviction that if you really want to keep a given bird you can, and so, whenever I have heard that "one couldn't keep so-and-so," I have always yearned to go and do it. And I had some good opportunities in India.

The Indian fancier swears by "satoo," which is pea-meal (really meal, not the very fine flour we use here for thickening soups). This he makes up into a paste with water for coarse-feeding birds, and ghee (clarified butter) for more delicate ones. Anyhow, "satoo" is the usual thing out there for everything that eats soft food.

A Barbet Problem.

The Indian Barbets are birds which, as a rule, do well in captivity. They are fruit-eaters, and take kindly to the satoo substitute. But the commonest of these Barbets, and about the prettiest, the little "Coppersmith," or crimson-breasted species, was, I was told, impossible to keep. After a few days it got "thick," and soon died, if one tried to keep it. So convinced of the hopelessness of keeping the Coppersmith were the bazaar dealers that I often get them to give me a bird, they admitting that they knew it would die on their hands.

Considering that Barbets never see satoo in the wild state, it struck me that a return to nature might be advisable, so I procured newly-caught Coppersmiths and fed them on banana. On this I found they lived and continued to do well, and I reared the young on this diet. Specimens so reared I gave to my chief, who kept a few birds, which had bread and milk as a standing dish of artificial food, not satoo.

The Coppersmith partook of this—they had fruit as well, of course—and did well upon it also. It was then obvious that there is something in satoo which does not suit the constitution of this particular species. Yet, be it observed, it is good for most soft food eaters, so that one should not really condemn an article of food because some delicate species cannot do with it.

Why Some Birds are Delicate.

It will be observed that the commonness of a bird is no criterion of the ease of keeping it. A similar case is that of our Blue Tit, which is not by any means "a good liver" in captivity, although so widely distributed and common when wild. Similarly, in India, I found that the Black-headed Oriole, although the commonest species of Oriole, in Bengal at any rate, seemed a very hard bird to keep. Fledglings were often brought in and old ones caught, but seldom indeed did one find an established captive. A friend of mine in Calcutta had one, and some time back one was actually brought over here, and lived for some time at the Zoo. Here, again, I suspect the satoo diet does not suit the individual species.

My theory is that some species can do without their natural articles of diet better than others, but one cannot tell this without experiment. Generally speaking, large birds will assimilate strange foods better than small ones, and omnivorous feeders better than those of more limited diet. This is natural, because the food of the larger species is of a grosser nature, and the stomachs of omnivorous species naturally adaptable to varied foods.

The Difficult Dipper.

Yet one must remember that the omnivorous Tits are not the easiest of subjects, and that the Dipper, a good-sized bird, is so difficult a one that no one has as yet kept a specimen a twelvemonth. I have seen old-caught Dippers "meated off" at the Zoo, and it is a great puzzle why they "pop off" so.

But, when one comes to think of it, no diving bird is an easy subject for captivity, except the Comorants and Penguins, both of which naturally spend much time in reposing ashore. With the Grebes, Auks, and Divers there always seems to be some difficulty in keeping them alive, and this, I think, applies to the Dipper also.

I believe the reason is simply that they miss the violent exertion involved in forcing themselves below and through the water, and so get generally out of condition.

The Importance of Exercise.

The vast importance of exercise was shown me in the case of the Bhimraj, or Rocket-tailed Drongo, in India. Few of these birds, many of which were brought to Calcutta every season, newly hand-reared, survived a year in the hands of the natives, yet this Drongo is a big, stout-looking bird, and easily fed.

The reason why it did not live better was simply that people would keep it in cages about eighteen inches across, in which it could not possibly get proper exercise. In a flight I found it was quite an easy bird to keep. It is not much of a hopper, but wants room to fly about.

Two Mynahs.

The Hill or Talking Mynah was reputed more delicate than the House Mynah. The reason was simple. The House Mynah is an active, omnivorous bird, like our Starling, the Hill Mynah a heavy, awkward one, feeding on fruit mostly. Fruit-eating birds have ravenous appetites, and, given a heavy bird in a small cage glutting itself on more nourishing food than fruit, the obvious result is plethora and fits. The Pied Mynah, on the other hand, did not do so well on satoo for the opposite reason, being specially insectivorous, so needed something extra.

The Way Out of the Difficulty.

It is, of course, impossible to entirely overcome the difficulties of keeping some species, which seem more highly strung interiorly—if I may so express it—than others; but my experience leads me to this belief—that what birds want more than anything is plenty of space and natural food. Given these, I don't think any species is beyond the power of aviculturists to manage.

In the matter of space, one ought to cut one's coat according to one's cloth—keep small birds if one only has a little room, and so on. Seed and fruit-eating birds are easily catered for, but the lover of insect-eaters should be constantly on the qui vive to find new substitutes for the insect life his pets would naturally consume.

In India raw fresh-water shrimps are procurable and well taken by insectivorous birds, and the tiny crustacea found in our fresh waters might be tried here.

No show secretary should be without this invaluable index to exhibitors all over the country. If any section be weak, reference to the Register of Wins will immediately enable a whip up to be sent.

"I have received the ANNUAL (part 2), with thanks. It might well have been called "Cage Birds Directory." There is no doubt it will be very useful in this way, comprising, as it does, the names and addresses of almost every exhibitor of cage birds of any note. It will also be very useful to fanciers when they are purchasing stock. They can see at a glance whether the advertiser has done any winning with his birds, and in this way save the cost of part 2 many times over.—THOS. ROBSON, 41, Shield st., Newcastle-on-Tyne."

Wild Plants for Cage Birds.

Weeds and Seeds of the Field and Wayside described

By R. MORSE.

With Footnotes, etc., by G. E. Weston.

If the above descriptions are carefully studied, and the illustrations compared, there should be no difficulty in identifying these two common plants. Then, for the sake of your feathered pets, you may go for a good long country ramble and hunt up these (also the other plants described) and take home with you a luxurious feed for them. Most of the Finches, it will be well for you to remember, are especially fond of the seeds of the two species of Plantain described above.

It may be interesting to note here that plantains possess valuable medicinal properties, and have for many years been used, both in England and in Germany, as a remedy for various diseases of the kidneys and bladder. The leaves are boiled in water, and the decoction thus made is ready for use as a drink when cool.

Elder (Sambucus nigra).

This shrub, or small tree, is well known to almost everyone. It has a corky bark, and its leaves have a rather strong, unpleasant odour when bruised. Its flowers appear in June. They are of a creamy-white colour, and have a sickly, well-known scent.

The fruit of this tree, known as elderberries, make valuable food for birds, and is much sought after by our many berry-eating species, such as the Blackcap, the Robin, the Starling, the Thrushes, etc. The berries should be gathered as soon as they are ripe, when they are generally of a purplish-black colour, but, rarely, may be found white, or green.

Leaf of Common Elder.
(Sambucus nigra.)

The late Rev. C. A. Johns, B.A., F.L.S., wrote:—"Evelyn, speaking in its (i.e., the elder's) praise, says:—'If the medicinal properties of the leaves, bark, berries, etc., were thoroughly known, I cannot tell what our countrymen would ail for which he would not find a remedy from every edge, either for sickness or wound.'" It will be seen from this quotation that the fruit of the elder, besides being a food, has in addition valuable medicinal properties.

Elderberries are useful "natural colouring agents," in addition to being acceptable items of diet for most frugivorous (and partly so) species. Several of the Finches I have known show more or less partiality for them, including Bullies, Chaffinches, and Greenfinches, though individual birds vary greatly in their "tastes." I have mixed dried elderberries, first soaking them in hot sweetened water, in the food of Blackcaps, Blackbirds, Thrushes, Nightingales, etc., and they have been devoured with relish. It is not at all a bad plan to keep by one a few bunches of the dried berries.—G.E.W.

Dewberries (Rubus Gaesii).

The common Dewberry is a well-known edible fruit of the country-side, and is greatly appreciated by berry-eating birds. The fruits ripen much earlier than blackberries, and are now to be found at their best almost everywhere.

The separate fruits which make the cluster (commonly called a "berry") are generally much larger than the corresponding parts of a blackberry and are usually covered with a greyish bloom, giving the fruit the appearance of being coated with dew—hence the name.

Dewberries have long been valued as possessing valuable astringent properties, and are therefore very useful in cases of diarrhœa.

Dewberries should be sought by everyone, desirous of promoting in a natural way the colour of berry-eating birds. They are valuable, too, inasmuch as they precede the equally useful blackberry which, in its turn, ushers in, so to speak, the privet berry. These, and similar berries, will keep fresh for a considerable time if cut in the branch, the stem of the latter being immersed in water (or they may be buried in sand, etc.). One may safely offer any bird dewberries when fully ripe.—G.E.W.

Charlock (Brassica sinapistrum).

Common Charlock, or Wild Mustard is very well-known as a common weed in corn fields, where it usually blooms from May till August. In many parts of Kent this abundant weed rejoices in the appellation of "Kilk." The seed-pods soon elongate after the flowers have fallen off, and may reach a length of two inches, or even more. The shape of the leaf, seed-pod and flower are shown in the illustration.

Charlock.
(Brassica sinapistrum).

A. Flower (typical of cruciform plants). B. Seed-pod cut open). C. A leaf.

The bright yellow flowers are "cruciform," (i.e. the petals are placed cross-wise) which is one of the distinguishing features of the "Cabbage Family" (Cruciferæ,, to which natural order the Charlock belongs. This order contains considerably above a thousand species, and every one has cruciform flowers. A point worthy of note is that the whole family does not contain even one poisonous species. Many, indeed, have valuable stimulant properties, and are useful as antiscorbutics, that is, in bad conditions of blood.

The seeds of the Charlock may be gathered in abundance during the late summer months. There are one or two species allied to Charlock which are also useful to bird-owners. The White Mustard (Brassica alba) is one of these, and is well-known in its young state, when it is eaten with cress (Lepidium sativum) as a spring salad. Another kind is the Black Mustard (Brassica sinapioides), the seeds of which yield the yellow powder commonly used as a condiment. Both of these species may be found wild in waste places, but are not nearly so abundant as Charlock.

Charlock is one of the most common and easily obtainable of the cruciform family of plants, the members of which figure so largely in the food bill of our birds in the fields. It is essentially a good seed for Linnets, Redpolls, Twites, and Greenfinches, though doubtless Chaffinches and other Finches, and some of the Buntings, too, also devour it in a wild state. After the corn is cut large flocks of the first-mentioned species frequent the stubble, and the seed they find most common there is that of charlock and its near relatives, of which they unquestionably consume enormous quantities, to the benefit of the farmer, who detests these weeds as harmful to his crops. With fresh-caught birds a few pods of charlock are especially good. It is called "ketlock" or "kedlock" in some districts. It is to be bought in most seed-shops, and is often found as an adulterant of sweet (or German summer) rape-seed, being a small reddish seed, very like the latter in appearance. It has a hot taste when chewed. —G.E.W.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects. harmless to everything else.

Shepherd's Purse (Capsella bursa pastoris).

This common weed probably received its name from the shape of its fruits and the seeds they contain. It grows in almost every part of the world, and is to be found in bloom nearly the whole year through. In size it varies greatly; it may be no more than two or three inches in height in dry situations, but often reaches considerably above a foot, and may even be two feet high under certain conditions.

Shepherd's Purse.
(Capsella bursa pastoris).

A. Seeding head. B. An upper leaf. C. A lower leaf. The shape and size of the leaves vary greatly.

The "radical" leaves (i.e. those growing from the base of the plant), are somewhat cut-up, as is shown in the illustration; while the "cauline" ones (i.e. those growing on the stem), are not cut-up, but have their base partly wrapped round the stem from which they grow.

The flowers are of a white colour, but are very small and inconspicuous. They soon fall off, however, and are quickly succeeded by comparatively large pods, which are inversely heart-shaped.

Shepherd's Purse is very abundant as a weed in gardens and most fields and waste places. It belongs to the very large "Cabbage Family" (Cruciferæ), a few notes about which have been given above. The seeds form a valuable food for all seed-eating cage-birds. The whole plant was at one time used as medicine by man.

Shepherds purse I need say little about—seeing I have already said so much in the past. It is my "pet" green food, as readers of CAGE BIRDS no doubt well know. I have used it very extensively (it is so common, easily gathered, and at hand the greater part of the year) both with young birds and old birds, and of practically all species, whether Canary, British or Foreign. Many hen British Finches (also hen Canaries) will practically rear their young upon it, and there is nothing young birds just out of the nest like better to nibble at. No matter under what circumstances used, I have never found any harm result from shepherds purse, and no matter how freely used. The seeding stage (whether green pods, or golden-brown fully ripe ones) is the most useful of all. Make a point never to gather it covered with road dust, etc., and when given to young birds, or to birds in cages, strip off all the large coarse leaves. This weed in the summer is commonly found smothered with blight (green fly), and nothing more valuable for moulting birds than a free supply of this can be offered; it is the "crowning excellence," so to speak, of an altogether excellent green, or "soft-seed," food. G.E.W.

Curled Dock (Rumex crispus).

Docks are well-known wild plants and very common almost everywhere. The commonest of all the species, however, is that generally known as the Curled Dock. It is about two to three feet high, but on dry or poor ground may sometimes not grow more than one foot in height. The stem is branched, and the lance-shaped (lanceolate) leaves are rather sharp-pointed and wavy. The flowers are in crowded clusters, which are leafy below, and are often to be found tinged with a bright red

This dock is much too abundant at least, so far as farmers are concerned and thus very large quantities of seed can easily be gathered for the many cage-birds which like it. Indeed, large heaps may very frequently be found on the borders of fields, the owners of the latter having had the docks pulled and spread out in the sun to be killed. If you happen to find a few such heaps, which you probably will if you ramble far into the country, you can gather a pint or two of seed in a very short time. The Curled Dock blooms from June to October.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Harvest Notes. — Doings of the Kestrel.

The weather of the past week has been delightful, and the sunny side of harvest has been evident upon all sides. Master and man have both gone cheerfully to work, consequently much has been cut and gathered, so that many fields, which we have seen pass through all stages, from sowing to reaping, are now bare acres of stubble. We used to watch the birds among the growing corn, the flocks of Sparrows, Finches, and Buntings, the graceful Whitethroat, collecting insects for his tiny family, sitting patiently upon the bramble in the hedgerow, the Swallows skimming over the tops of the waving mass; but now all this is changed, the corn has gone, and with it some of the birds. Those that remain have so altered their daily actions that we look upon them as almost new arrivals. Just now we have frequent opportunities to watch the doings of the Hawks, for the young birds are now feeding for themselves. This is an easy matter, as the hedgerows and corn fields are alive with small birds and mammals. These are quickly captured, so that the young Hawks are most fascinating birds to watch, not only on account of their strong wing power and graceful flight, but the sporting spirit within us hopes to see something of pursuit and capture, a sight common enough in days gone by, before the gamekeeper watched them so closely. During harvest a heavy toll is taken of these new-fledged birds; the boldness which is bred in them is their undoing, and many a strong bird, daily doing good by following his natural instincts, and thinning the flocks of surplus Sparrows, is struck down by the fatal gun, in order to protect next season's brood of pheasants. In the destruction that is carried on at this time of the year, both Sparrow Hawk and Kestrel suffer, though the latter is one of those useful birds which, during most of the year, hunts and kills mice and large insects; in fact, his presence in the corn field now is for that very purpose. The mice have lost the shelter of the standing corn, and become an easy prey to the quick-eyed Hawk. It is not often one gets the opportunity to watch a large bird flying upon a level with one's self. The other day a Kestrel flew out of some trees at the top of Box-hill. When a little way out, and on a level with us, he commenced to hover. With depressed tail and rapid wing beats, he remained quite stationary, and then, with closed wings, he dropped like a stone, flung out from the hill. We expected to see him drop to earth, but when within ten or twelve feet of it, he regained his balance, hovered for a few seconds, and then went down. This hovering of the Kestrel is a wonderful performance, for he can do it in all weathers—in a gale of wind, in a light breeze, or dead calm—it apparently makes no difference, although possibly under some conditions he is obliged to use more muscular force to achieve his object than under others, but what these conditions are it is impossible to say. He is always head to wing, and his wing beats are similar to those which carry him forward, but the depressed tail acts as a brake, so that it is just as probable the Kestrel can hover as easily in a gale of wind as he can in a calm. One of the benefits we derive from the clearing of the harvest is the easy access we obtain to the hedgerows. The standing corn has guarded these during the spring and summer months. Everything has grown at its own sweet will, we see now a real English hedgerow in all its luxuriance and tangled beauty, the downy blossoms of the wild clematis form a foil to the red berries of the thorn and the fruiting bramble. Among these, at almost every step, we have evidence of the doings of birds. Here are the discarded houses of Blackbirds and Thrush, Finch and Warbler, and just under the overhanging woodbine a lusty nest full of young Greenbirds shows us the season is not quite over, and although this is possibly the third or fourth brood, the old bird is just as anxious for their welfare as he would be in the early spring days. It is the cock bird that calls in such plaintive tones; he makes all the fuss, and watches with something like anxiety our near approach. Does he care for the offspring more than the hen bird, or is it done to give her time to slip quietly away?

Protecting the Partridges.

Game birds hardly need the protection from poachers they did in our youth, but even now the game-keeper leaves nothing to chance. As soon as the corn is carried the stubble is protected by bushes put into the ground at regular intervals. This is done to prevent the poachers netting the field, which is managed by dragging a net across it after dark, thus catching the sleeping covey. The bushes tear the net and thus foil their plans. It is always an interesting sight to watch a covey of Partridges retiring for the night, the old bird calls the young ones together when they all pack in a circle, each bird facing outwards, so that they all act as sentinels, and very wary ones they make. The stealer of Partridges, whether biped or quadruped, must go quietly to work.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do busiuess, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

HYGIENE OF BIRD KEEPING.
By W. GEO. CRESWELL, M.D., L.R.C.P., F.Z.S.
Price 1/1, post free from CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
LANCET: "This little book will be welcomed by all lovers of birds, whether ornithologists, aviculturists, or the owners of a single pet songster. The author deals with his subject in a thoroughly practical and scientific manner, and the results of his experiments prove the fallacy of some rule-of-thumb theories. . . . The book is well illustrated."
COUNTRY LIFE: " . . . a surprising amount of really valuable advice for all who keep small birds, whether in cages or aviaries. . . . Those who approach the subject with an open mind must admit the cogency of the author's arguments; and these, backed by a very wide experience at first hand, will prove hard nuts to crack for many of the champions of the 'good old methods.' . . . We venture to think that his experience will pave the way for a revolution in the methods of bird keeping in the near future."

MATTHEWS, LINNET KING.
Gentlemen, I have the largest selection of Linnets in England; big, fine, healthy Linnets with nut-brown backs, well pencilled, steady, 1/6; also a few extra large birds, well pencilled, 2/-; will make sure winners. I have the nicest lot of blood-red breasted birds ever seen; singing beautiful through their moult; 1/6, with grand singing cage and a packet of my special mixture, instructions how to feed, 2/6 lot; real bargains. If you want your birds to sing, and keep in good health, try my special mixed seed, four packets a 1/-. Goldfinches; Goldfinches! Large selected Peartree Goldfinches, well buttoned and mooned with good broad heads, steady make, sure winners, 2/6; all birds sent out exactly as described; anyone requiring a first-class team of British, any kind, send at once, and I will send any distance on approval. Willingly read what others say:—September 8th, 1907. 9, Newton-st., Flowery Field. Sir,—Send me the following birds; the Goldfinch and Linnet I got from you last year has bred me some grand Mules. Both proved Mulers, and been fed and moulted on nothing but your special mixture. They are almost ready for the show-bench. You are the only man I ever got good birds from; use this as you like. Wishing you every success, from A. Clegg to Matthews, Birdcatcher. I have scores of testimonials from successful Mule-breeders this season which are open for inspection. If you want a good bird send at once, and have it on seven days approval; cash or deposit.—Matthews, Birdcatcher, 44, George-st., Hyde, Cheshire.

BRITISH BIRD EXHIBITORS
Those intending moulting out some winners write me. Have supplied hundreds of winners this last few years; ½d. stamp will bring you a few testimonials from successful exhibitors which I have received with birds I have supplied; have hundreds of British birds coming in now, and I sell more than any other dealer in the world, and having such a big chance of picking out winners, can supply beautiful 1907 Cock Goldfinches, 2/6, 3/- and 4/- Cock Bullfinches, 2/6, 3/-, Cock Linnets, 1/-, 1/6 and 2/ Greenfinches, 1/-.
Mr. W. Veitch, Jedburgh, writes, October 3rd, 1905: "Send British Goldfinch and two hen Bullfinches. I might say a young Goldfinch purchased from you won me two 1sts Hawick, 1st and special Kelso, 5th Edinburgh, class of thirty-five, 3rd Galashiels, twice 2nd local class here."
This is only one, have scores like it. Send ½d. stamp for proof. Show Cages for any above, 2/-, three 5/6. Established 1879.
J. SANDIFORD, Bird Specialist, Preston.

HARRY ALLEN.
Champion of all champions, patronised by all the leading contest singing fanciers and exhibitors. I have the finest lot of cock Linnets ever seen or heard, and every bird comes from the same place as my champion comes from, which is termed by everyone who has heard him as a veritable champion. Big, fine, healthy cock Linnets, very tame, and sure winners, 1/- each; extra picked birds, large, good colour, stands well, 1/6 each; no rubbish, every bird guaranteed a cock and in the best of health; they are singing beautifully, and honestly worth the money. Grand cock Linnet, picked specially for singing, with singing cage, a packet of my special mixture (which is said by most of the Leeds Linnet singers to be the finest every put before the public), and instructions how to feed, 3/- the lot; a real bargain. I defy any dealer to supply the same for the money. Gentlemen, if you want a bird to win at contests, or sing all day at home try one or two of these; they are listening to my champion all day, and are pouring out some of his wonderful notes. I may say any one of his notes is worth more than I am asking for the above lot. House-moulted cock Linnets, singing hard ready for contests, 10/6 each; honestly worth money, and impossible to get tamer birds. Every bird fit for show, and bred Mules this year. I have a cock Canary singing the Linnet notes in the exact tone, taught by my champion; 30/-, with cage; I guarantee this bird to sing anywhere in less than 10 seconds; suitable for learning youngsters. His chief notes are scraping and reeing. Four packets of my special mixture 1/-. If you want your birds to sing at one another with their wings down, send P.O. 1/6 for my Book of Secrets, post free. With this method I have my birds singing at empty cages. Every Linnet fancier should have this book, especially novices; every bird gets my personal attention before sent out. Please remember, when buying from me, you are buying from one who thoroughly understands the Linnet and its song; £25 to anyone who can find a hen Linnet in my place. Please give me a trial order and a visit, as I guarantee you some singing night or day. Beware of worthless imitations. Cash or deposit.—Harry Allen, 42, Brown Hill-crescent, Harehills, Leeds.

WOODSTOCK SHOW.

This show was held in connection with the Agricultural Show in the beautiful park attached to Blenheim Palace, on September 10th. The entry was hardly so numerous as on some previous occasions, but the quality was the best we have seen at Woodstock, and the awards were well made. Mr. Hughes, the new secretary, proved a worthy successor to Mr. Castle, who has held the reins for so long, and everything that could be done for the exhibits and exhibitors was done. Mr. Calcutt again had charge of the tent, and had everything in good order. Mr. G. H. Billett judged. NORWICH (5): 1, vhc, Lees, grand shaped wing marked buff, capital colour and quality, a good win; 2, Jupe, very neat shaped buff, with saddle marking, grand colour and quality; 3, Lewin, very shapely, grand feathered buff, just a shade long in tail. A.O.V. CANARY or MULE (3): 1, Lewin, well-known four-pointed buff Goldfinch Canary Mule, looking well; 3, Lees, another neat Mule, three-pointed and well shown. BRITISH FINCH (2, first withheld): 2, 3, Levett, very smart Bullfinch and Chaffinch, capital shape, colour, and feather. BRITISH A.O.V. (5): 1, 3, Poole, very smart Gold Crested Wren, and a rich-coloured Redstart, both shown in grand form; 2, Burrows, large, shapely, well-marked Wryneck, in good form; vhc, Miss Hopwood, Taylor. FOREIGN (7): 1, Davies, grand-coloured King Parrakeet, large and shapely; 2, Poole, very pretty pair of Ruficauda, good colour and marking, in grand feather; 3, res, Cottrell-Dormer, very rich coloured Indian Mynah, in grand form, and a good Australian Myuah; vhc, Miss Hopwood; hc, Honeybone. SELLING 12/6 (5): 1, Poole; 2, Nelson Bros.; 3, Jupe; hc, Lewin.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

 A Homing Linnet.

A friend of ours had a brown Linnet. It was ill for some time, and they were told they could not cure the bird, so they consented to let it off. In a good many yards people had plants and shrubs growing. Two days had passed away when the little bird returned into the yard, making itself very happy flying about. The owner, seeing the bird, thought it was like the bird they had let off, so she hung the cage on the nail where it always hung. The bird returned into the cage, and they walked steadily up and shut the cage door, and it is quite well again, singing as well as ever. Whatever herbs or greens the little bird had got, had cured it of its illness.—May Beadnall, age 12; 7, Albany-st., Middlesbro'-on-Tees.

* Our Favourite Bird.

The Goldfinch is a great favourite with most people, and deservedly so, for it has many attractive points to recommend it to the notice of amateurs. While the cocks, as a rule, are larger and more brilliantly coloured than the hens, in any given race of these birds, a hen Spanish or Russian Goldfinch will often be larger and more handsome than a cock of English race. The simpler the food is, in the house, the better for the bird; Canary seed should be the staple diet, but a little hemp and summer rape seed may be given occasionally for a change. Groundsel flower-buds and small thistle-heads are the best greenfood for these birds. The nest is very compactly put together, and is made with moss, grass, fibres and lichens, and lined with the down of plants. The eggs are four or five in number and ressemble those of the Canary, with which it will breed freely, sometimes producing very handsome mules, which, as a rule, make good singers.—Stanley Holway, 25, Litchdon-st., Barnstaple; age 12 years.

* The Blue Titmouse.

One afternoon last year as I was taking a walk round the garden, I saw a Blue-tit, which was at the top of a hole in the apple tree. As I approached the apple tree, I saw that the Tit had had some sunflower seeds eating. This I found out, because I could see the husks upon the ground. Looking carefully into the hole, I discovered the nest with the hen Tit sitting on the eggs, and, putting my hand into the hole to catch her, failed. The hen gave me a few sharp pecks, when my hand was in the hole. After I let the bird get out of the hole, she began to call. In a few minutes her mate returned. Then they began to make a noise very much like that of the Chaffinch. On putting my hand into the hole to get one of the eggs, I found that two of them were broken. The next morning the eggs were very cold. Unfortunately, the Tits never took to the nest again.—Reginald Langford, age 13; Beaulieu Schools, New Forest.

CLUB REPORTS

LEEDS.

Our usual weekly Linnet Singing Contest was held at the Old Bird House, King's Head, Shannon Street, on September 7th, when 12 birds sung for two prizes given by Mr. J. Booth:—1, Hardcastle; 2, Naylor; Judge, Mr. T. Summers; timekeeper, Mr. E. Worth.—T. SUMMERS, hon. sec.

READING AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held Palmer Hall, West Street, September 4th. Mr. A. Lovegrove, of Henley-on-Thames, was elected a member. The complete arrangements for show to be held December 11th (as regards the schedule, etc.), was left to the October meeting, when all members must please attend.—G. A. CHARLES, sec.

ROCHDALE GOOD INTENT C.B.S.

We had another pleasant evening on September 4th, when Mr. George Adams gave us a paper on "The Lancashire." We had a very good discussion afterwards, nearly all the members joining in, but Mr. Adams answered the questions put to him quite readily. The usual vote of thanks was passed to the lecturer.—SAM. M. CLAYTON, hon. sec.

HARTLEPOOLS C.B.S.

Meeting September 4th. The classification for the open show was decided upon. We are giving thirty-eight open classes (nine Yorks. and nine Norwich), and with the inner workings of our society moving on smooth lines, everything points to a successful show on the 6th and 7th December next. Novice classes in Yorks. and Norwich have been added to last year's classification, and the patronage of the Y.C.C. has been granted.—E. WOODHEAD, hon .sec.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held at Headquarters, September 5th. November Open Show matters were discussed, and every member expressed determination to make that show an unqualified success. Three five guinea challenge cups for members are to be purchased, one for Norwich Plainheads, one for Yorkshire, and one for British. A generous list of specials and good prize-money for open classes will be offered. Our classification for open and members' classes is second to none. Schedules are in printer's hands and will shortly be ready.—T. W. QUARMAN, Assist. Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Members and friends met on September 5th to hear Mr. Allen Silver's promised lecture on "British Bird Keeping as a Hobby to-day." Mr. Silver's masterly handling of his subject was keenly appreciated, those present listening with deep interest to the many valuable points the lecturer brought out. At the close of the lecture many questions were asked, and readily answered by Mr. Silver. Upon the proposal of the chairman, a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, and a hope was expressed that we should again have the pleasure of hearing Mr. Silver.—W. HODGSON, hon. sec.

BORDER COUNTIES B.B.M.F.B.C.

Meeting held in Lockhart's Cocoa Room, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on September 7th. The balance-sheet and secretary's report for the past season were presented. It was suggested that, owing to the difficulty of holding meetings of the committee, and generally transacting the club's affairs, a special meeting be held at Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms, Clayton-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on Saturday, 21st September, at 6 p.m., to consider the advisability of reconstructing the club. All fanciers are cordially invited to attend. Any further particulars will be supplied by J. T. PORTEOUS, Deneholme, Hexham, hon. sec. pro tem.

LONG EATON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held September 7th, at the Blue Bell Hotel, when a large number of members and friends gathered together to witness a bird-washing exhibition, which was given with all skill by Mr. John Turner, the club's friend and secretary. All the fanciers, young and old learnt the way to mix the water, also the way to handle the birds. Mr. Turner was asked questions from all over the hall, which he readily answered. Mr. Oliver Clark agreed to give a lecture on his famous Yorkshires, which was very interesting, and delighted everyone in the room. The meeting came to a close with a hearty vote of thanks to our Secretary and Chairman for their kindness.—W. HALLAM.

ST. ANDREWS O.S.

The seventh meeting of the St. Andrews Ornithological Society was held on the 4th inst., Mr. P. Whittet, the president, in the chair. The secretary submitted copy of this year's schedule, which highly pleased the members, it being the best ever issued by the society, as it contains no less than eighty specials and two cups. The members then considered the question of holding prize cards, and it was unanimously decided to again supply Mr. Garrioch's shilling models to exhibitors free of charge. It was also agreed that no charge be made for specials. Two new members were then admitted, and the date of next meeting fixed for Sept 18th, for the purpose of making full arrangements for show to be held on October 5th.—THOS. AUCHTERLONIE, hon. sec. and treas.

SCOTCH FANCY NATIONAL DERBY O.A.

The executive met on 5th September, and after making arrangements for the annual show to be held in Grand National Halls, Main-street, Gorbals, Glasgow, on 21st September, they called upon Mr. Duncan, of Buchanan-street, and purchased a very handsome silver cup and gold medal to be awarded to the best bird in the show. The former has to be won three times, not consecutively, and the latter right away. The executive has reason to believe that the competition will be the keenest ever known. Well-known winners are not likely to have it all their own way. For the benefit of those in search of stock, a catalogue is in the printer's hands, and will contain the usual particulars. The members continue to appreciate your widely-circulated journal.—T. SMITH, sec.

GALASHIELS O.S.

Meeting held in the Good Templar Hall, on August 31st. Mr. Tod in the chair, who, previous to the business of the meeting referred touchingly to the death of Mr. John Cameron, the oldest and most respected member, and one of our best workers, who had stood loyally by the society for over 30 years. The schedule was the next item on the agenda for consideration. The Scotch Fancy Canaries remain as last year, 13 classes. One class was added to last year's classification for Borders. The secretary intimated that he had secured the services of the following gentlemen as judges:—Scotch Fancy, Messrs. John Dagleish, of Leith, and Geo. Fulton, of Partick; Borders, William Haddow, of Hamilton; all other varieties of cage birds, J. W. Bruce, of Coldstream. It was agreed to advertise show in CAGE BIRDS, "Pigeons and Poultry," and "Fanciers' Review." Four new members were proposed.—ALEX. SMITH, Sec.

THE YORKSHIRE UNION.

Council meeting held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, on September 7th, Mr. Battye, president, occupying the chair. The minutes of previous meeting were passed as read. In connection with the Union Novice Competitions it was decided that in case of a tie for a medal, the person having gained the most points with money prizes should be declared the winner, and in the event of a person being a medal winner in both the Yorkshire and Norwich sections, the medal be awarded for the section in which most points had been obtained. The council agreed that the Union water-tins be used for all exhibits in the Yorkshire Classes at Union shows, and be supplied free of charge, the Union to pay the carriage to the first show, and thereafter each society to forward them carriage paid to the society holding the next show, the society holding the last show to return them carriage paid to the secretary of the Union. Mr. Ramsden's teapot will be awarded to the exhibitor gaining most points at Union shows during the season with exhibits marked "R.P.," the three highest birds of each exhibitor to count for points. A medal each to the second and third in this competition will be presented by Mr. Ramsden. Messrs. Hollas and Wellock were appointed scrutineers for the next ballot for the election of officers and revision of rules.—F. HAMMOND, sec.

BRADFORD COUNTY B.B.M.C.

A committee meeting was held on Saturday last. It was decided to give our patronage to eight shows. As there was a feeling that this meeting had been called so soon after our announcement, and as some societies have had no opportunities to discuss the matter. The applications from societies who were holding their shows in October were gone into, and patronage was given to Windhill, Shipley and District O. Society's Show, held October 12th (W. Mundell, Esq., judge). Also to Otley, October 19th, but as Mr. Mundell judges this show also, and, of course, members' birds would be shown at both places, it was suggested that the clubs agree as to getting a separate judge for British Classes at either show. Finally, Mr. Cowgill was asked to judge the British Classes at Otley, and consented. The applications from other societies for later shows we left over until our next meeting, Wednesday, the 25th, and the time for such applications to be received is Tuesday, the 24th September. We decided to give eight shows our patronage, and have six to allot three inside the Bradford district, and three outside. The committee of the B. and C.B.B. and M. Club guarantee the value of £5, half to the champion, and half to the novices; there are other special prizes to be competed for which are to be allotted later, for most points gained by a member of this club at shows held under this club's patronage, each member's three highest birds to count for same.—W. R. MYERS, hon. sec.

AMONG THE WALLSEND FANCIERS

SIR,—I have intended for some time to send you a few notes on our Wallsend affairs, but have been prevented. To commence with, I must say that we have had to have a change of secretary for the second time. Unfortunately Mr. Evins, who has done so well for us during this last year, and made the last show such a success, has suffered a great misfortune and bereavement by the death of his wife. All who have made his acquaintance will be sincerely sorry, and will sympathise with him in his sorrow. Mr. Evins has, through this, had to relinquish the secretarial duties. We are all very sorry at losing him, as he was so ardent and eager to make Wallsend a success.

A meeting of the Wallsend and District Cage Bird Association was held in the club room at the Station Hotel on Thursday evening last, a large number of members being present. Mr. Macdonald was in the chair, and opened the meeting by moving a vote of condolence to Mr. Evins in the untimely and great loss he has suffered by the death of his wife, as she was very clever and a great help to him in his hobby, as in all things else belonging to him, which makes his loss still the greater. The Chairman was asked to convey the resolution and feeling of the members to him. Afterwards the schedule for the next show was completed by adding a number of classes to the Yorkshires, Lizards, etc. Then the question of appointing a secretary came up. After a long and careful talk on the matter, it was decided to appoint Mr. Johnson. He was felt to be in every way qualified to fill the position and continue the progressive policy of the Wallsend fanciers. The Treasurer pointed out that we now held a fair balance in hand, after paying all claims on last feather show, which proved a great success.

It had been decided at the previous meeting to hold a smoker in the club room, and present a medal with the silver cup to the exhibitor of the best Norwich bird in the show. The honour was won by Mr. W. Ronald, of Walker. A large number of tickets have been sold, and the smoker looks like being a huge success this week.

Everything is going on splendidly, and promising well for our show in November, for which we are making every provision and encouragement for exhibitors to support us. Our judges are popular, and several specialist clubs are giving us their patronage on that account.

One of our members, Mr. T. Stubbs, has been very successful this year in breeding and rearing three nice Greenic-Bully Hybrids. To accomplish this he has taken two seasons learning to feed the birds and how to hatch them. Now he says he has learned the secret to success in this line. I send you a card showing his first one, which is a promising bird. It has been sent to Mr. J. Dixon, of Wigton, to moult. Mr. Stubbs has reared other two, which are doing well in his own home. For these notes a detailed account would be too long, but he has promised to supply me with his experience if it would be any use to others, as he had many difficulties to surmount, which proves that rare Hybrids are not to be seen in every bird-room. The fancier at left-hand corner of card is Mr. Stubbs, next Mr. Ronald, Mr. McGinn, and myself. The one next Ronald is not a fancier. The little boy is Mr. Ronald's hopeful.

You have had reports of breeding results of most of our members, so that I need not further enlarge, but only say that I am sorry that the Sunderland fanciers have done so poorly. Better luck another season. Bird breeding is like no other leisure occupation. We may work, arrange, and do everything that is possible, after which we get little reward. He who thinks that it is an easy matter to breed birds is sure to meet with disappointment; but for that blessed word, "hope," many would soon give up.

Quite a lot of Mules have been bred on Tyneside this season. We had eleven in one class at our nest feather show, showing that many are taking up the higher section of aviculture. Now, sir, I think that I have finished for the present, and conclude by thanking you for all the grand articles and sound advice published by CAGE BIRDS.

JOHN M. MACDONALD.

Wallsend.

A CANARY FOSTERS TWO TITS.

SIR,—If I remember right I saw someone writing a short time ago saying a soft-billed bird could not be reared by a Canary. I have reared two Tits this year. They would be about one week old, I think, when I got them. They are moulting now; also the same hen has reared three Brown Linnets, which, I think, will be one month or five weeks old. Still what seems most funny to me is that I have had her two years, and she would not feed a Canary. I don't know if this is out of the common or not, but if you wish I will write you how I fed them in the nest, etc.

A. DIPPIE.

HYBRID BREEDING RESULTS.

SIR,—I have tried hard to breed some Bullfinch Hybrids this year, but have not succeeded. I think it would be a good thing if fanciers who have succeeded would send a note to you for publication, giving number of young and description. Something of that sort would enable the less fortunate ones to gauge the breeding results, and to alter their own plans for another year to their own benefit.

HARD LUCK.

SWEATING HENS.

SIR,—I was pleased to see Mr. Crisp's neat little letter in "Cage Birds" this week and his question concerning "sweating hens." I fully agree with him that this is a very important question indeed. Like others I have had my losses through this complaint. Only this season I have lost five nests of young, and last year more. I think Mr. Crisp will agree with me that the term "sweating hens" is a misnomer. Hen canaries do not sweat (perspire), nor do their young ones. Granted, they get wet in the nest, but this is caused by the excreta and the condensation of the breath of the nestlings, a condition, I believe, never found with wild birds, for two reasons: Firstly, the mother is always in vigorous health; secondly, the nests (Finches in particular) are built loosely and in branches, so the air can circulate through them, not in a stuffy box or earthenware pan. In all cases that have come under my notice the hen has been in a languid, sickly condition, unfit to attend to her brood and sitting closely upon them. The cause of this condition is difficult to find. I consider it is a lack of natural conditions, too much egg food, and weakness through close breeding. It is seldom experienced among the commoner canaries kept on plain fare. The only remedy that suggests itself is toning up the stock and weeding out weakly hens.

J. W. CUTMORE.

THE CLEAR & TICKED QUESTION

SIR,—Allow me to endorse Mr. Spillman's remarks, and go one further by adding that I hope societies when framing their schedules will let invisible ticks compete as clears. We may depend, as Mr. Spillman remarks, many a good bird has been spoilt by handling to find ticks.

KILMARNOCK MULES & HYBRIDS.

An Inquiry.

SIR,—I have been inquiring, but I cannot find that any clear Mules or Hybrids were bred in Kilmarnock in 1907. If there were perhaps some of your readers will say by whom, and what they are.

A BREEDER.

CERTAINLY NOT.

SIR,—Could any of your readers answer us through your most valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS: Does the Cage Bird Union allow its members to exhibit their birds in other people's names, or in their children's names, at Non-affiliated Shows? Wishing your paper, CAGE BIRDS, good luck.

BULLFINCHES BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—Having read in your paper recently about Bullfinches breeding in captivity, I beg leave to pen my experiences, trusting the same may be of some interest to your readers. In a very small indoor place I have bred with and reared young from a pair of Bullfinches. My hen is again sitting now on her third nest of four eggs. The young from the first two nests are flying about and doing for themselves. I feed them chiefly on chickweed, groundsel, and shepherd's purse, with a little egg food. I have found the Bullfinch, when properly attended to with wild seeds, a very good feeder in captivity.

IN-BREEDING.

Has It Injured the Scotch Fancy.

SIR,—When I penned my note on in breeding, I never dreamt that it would be taken notice of by a breeder in Canada. I was very pleased to read Mr. Bruce's letter, and to hear of his remarkable success. If he has the correct type—erect, forward reach, head right down, prominent shoulders, clean cut out chest, ample depth through chest, long body, nicely fitting wing, good bend on body, and tail right under the perch—he should do a lot to foster the Scotch Fancy Canary in the land that has become the home of many of our countrymen. He is under a mis-impression: I did not complain, but pointed out what I know to be perfectly true, that the in-breeding of a certain strain is working havoc; also that the high price, not for the pick, but for the refuse of the Scotch Fancy Canary is damaging to its progress. In-breeding may be permissible to a certain extent, but it must be carefully treated and not overdone. The breeding of strong, healthy birds is of paramount importance, and should be kept to the front. I should like to hear from my friend how the Scotch Fancy Canary is developing in Canada, and whose strain he is working upon.

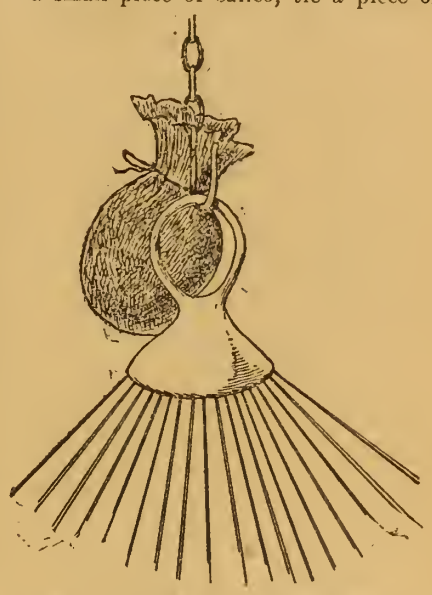
ILLUSTRATED IDEAS



Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

NOVEL RED-MITE PREVENTATIVE.

Sent by T. Craighill, 20, Yates Street, Rhodes, Middleton.

Applied to hanging cages (in drawing and living rooms) I have found the device I enclose a sketch of very effectual in preventing red mite, or any other insect, infesting the cages. I simply put some Keating's Powder (or pyrethrum powder) on a small piece of calico, tie a piece of cotton round to the form of a tiny bag, then hang it on the hook or hanger from which the cage is pendent, when the movement of the bird dusts itself and the cage enough to keep such mite away. I have proved this to be a success.—THOS. CRAIGHILL.

A USE FOR FEATHERS.

Sent by W. E. Williams, 25, North Penrallt Carnarvon, N. Wales.

My feather brush I find a very useful item in my bird-room, especially if I have any timid hens sitting during the breeding season, for it brushes out the cage-bottom very quietly, and very clean, after I have the sand-tray out. Anyone can get the feathers to make the brush of, and the handle can be of any length, according to the purpose for which it is wanted. I use it also to brush out my seed-boxes and hoppers, etc., to shift the dust which will collets in t[illegible]

TWITTERINGS.

A Barnsbury (London) resident has, it is said, secured in his garden a young Peregrine Falcon in fine plumage.

A grocer at Earl's Colne, Essex, when cutting bananas from a hunch found a foreign bird's nest in it containing four unbroken eggs.

Mr. T. Auchterlonie, the hon. sec. of the St. Andrews O.S., writes us that he has removed to 7, Park-street, St. Andrews, to which address all correspondence should be addressed.

The first annual open show of the Plumstead, Woolwich and District Cage Bird Society will be held on January 2nd and 3rd. Mr. J. Robson will judge.

We have decided to hold our Annual Open Roller Singing Contest on January 10th and 11th next, writes Mr. J. STRINGER, Sec., Bolton and District O. and R. C. S.

Chester Show will be held on December 11th, instead of November 27th, owing to clashing with Derby. Mr. A. Wellings will judge. Thus writes Mr. A. J. RED, the hon. sec.

Mr. H. W. Battye has been appointed to judge our open show of Cage Birds on October 30th and 31st.—J. HOUGHTON, hon. sec. Gloucester and District Cage Bird Society.

One of my Canary hens, writes Mr. Rowley-Morris (Plympton), hatched two birds out of one egg, on Sunday, August 11th. They are perfectly formed birds, and are alive and doing well. I hear it is a most unusual thing.

We hear from Mr. Woolhouse, the manager of Dulwich Show, that Mr. Brownlie is again working hard in the interests of his particular pet, the Border Fancy Canary, having collected thirty specials for that section from his personal friends.

Owing to the resignation of Mr. Cooke, Mr. A. Emery, of 239, Shobnall-street, Burton-on-Trent, has been elected hon. sec. of the Burton-on-Trent C.B.S., and he informs us that it has been decided to hold an open show on December 14th.

J. H. Roe, Esq., of Derby, will judge Cage Birds at Oxford on October 23rd. The show will be held under Cage Bird Union Rules. We are giving a Novice Class for Canaries, also one for Any Variety, British.—W. J. MOODY, hon. sec.

Mr. Woodhead, the Hartlepools' C.B.S. hon. sec. asks us to state that in future the meetings of the society will be held on the Wednesday and not Tuesday night. This alteration being to meet the wishes of the hon. sec. of the Y.M.C.A.

The Secretary of the St. Helens and District O.S. is pleased to make it known that he has secured the use of the large room in the Town Hall for the show to be held on January 10th and 11th. It being only three minutes walk from each station.

Mr. Bonar Law, M.P., heads the patrons' list of the forthcoming show of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., and has kindly contributed to this show fund, but owing to his absence from England cannot he present at the show. It is expected that Mr. Lane Mitchell, J.P., the Mayor of Camberwell, will open the show.

I have removed from my old address to 52, Methuen-street, Vickertown, Barrow-in-Furness, where all communications should be to.—WM. WILLISON ((Sec.), Barrow-in-Furness

Our advertisement columns to-day contain an announcement which many lovers of British birds will read with regret, and that is the retirement of Mr. S. W. Birchley. This retirement is brought about by business matters, and Mr. Birchley's consequent removal from Churchdown. Although Mr. B. is having to clear out his present splendid stud, we hope that ere long we shall hear of his returning to our ranks, that is, after he gets comfortably settled in his new home.

Will Miss Cicely Gilbert, late of Ashford, kindly forward us her present address?

Kindly draw attention to the change in Merthyr Tydfil Show Secretary's address to 30, Gilfach Cynon, instead of No. 2. J. THOMAS.

I am delighted, writes Mr. J. B. Waterman with Mr. Battye's book entitled "Yorkshiro Canaries," and while it would he like trying to gild refined gold or painting the lily, to speak in terms of praise of the great ability of this enthusiastic lover of the bird of "Grace and Beauty," I must say the work will prove a very valuable addition to every bird lover's library. I found it not only intensely interesting, but full of good, sound, useful information, expressed with a clearness not often found in works of this description; and in my opinion it will very materially assist the young beginner to achieve the highest fame in the Fancy. The chapter on "Dont's" is itself worth the money, coming as it does from a fancier of such a wide and varied experience with the Yorkshire bird, as Mr. Battye.

Remarkable Offer to Canary Fanciers.—1,000 cwts. of Canary grit to be given away. During September and October we will give 1 cwt. of our Celebrated Health Grit absolutely free, to every purchaser of 1 cwt. of Canary seed. Giant Spanish, 24s. cwt.; finest Turkish, 15s. cwt. Samples on application. Carriage paid to nearest station. Cash with order.—John Dibh, seed importer, 31 and 33, White Abbey-road, Bradford. Tel. 247x. [Advt.

Dealing with the question of migration, Mr. Graham Murdock writes:—There is evidence that Kingfishers do occasionally migrate (vide "Heligoland," by the late Herr Gätke, Edinburgh, 1895, David Douglas, p. 420. also "Migration of Birds," by R. M. Barrington (Ireland), 1900, pp. 180-1); but as a rule these birds remain with us all the year round. In the winter of 1894-5, when part of the Bela, at Milnthorpe, Westmorland, was frozen over, I caught a cock Kingfisher "fast" by the feet in a thin sheeting of ice. I relieved it, took it home, kept it for several days, then let it fly. I have seen Kingfishers every winter for the last five years on the Wenning, near my home here.

Songs of Autumn.

Among the autumn songsters which have just begun their tunes not the least welcome is the Starling. He delights to sing from the very topmost twigs of the orchard trees, and if his singing cannot compare with the sweeter voices of some other birds, it is, at any rate, cheerful. Now he imitates a few of the clear notes of the song Thrush, then his strain becomes more mellow and we seem to recognise the Blackbird's pipe, until he suddenly goes off at a tangent in a long half-human whistle. Little squeaks, clatterings, and rather unmusical sounds are introduced into the varied song, and all the time the bird flutters his glossy wings as if he were thoroughly enjoying himself. In the evening he joins numbers of his kind in some particular tree, and all sing in concert, before their evening exercise above the reed bed or covert in which they roost.

Rare Storks at Large.

The only specimens of the Japanese Stork known in England have escaped from their owner, Mr. Hy. Morris, Stonebridge, Blackboys. These interesting birds are about 5ft. 3ins. in height, with black plumes for a tail, and a red crest on their head about the size of a florin. Body and wings are white. Being of this rare and attractive plumage and size, the birds are likely to have been witnessed on their stray flight, and it is hoped no danger has overtaken them through being shot at. The birds were quite tame, and were therefore allowed to roam about freely upon his property at Stonebridge. They were last observed there on Sunday, August 18, and are supposed to have been blown away during flight by a gale early in the week. These Storks eat any kind of food—bread, meat, etc., and being tame, will come if whistled to. They might therefore be enticed into an enclosure with food, and so captured by any person observing them and desiring to restore them to their owner.

Kingfishers' Habits.

The Kingfishers have had a good year, and many have been bred and reared. It is pleasant to see half a dozen of these pretty birds where one has only seen an odd specimen or two, and these not very frequently. Soon they will be moving, for the Kingfisher is partly migratory. They will go down the stream to be within easy reach of open or tidal waters should severe weather set in during the winter. It is doubtful if these birds always follow the course of the stream in their migration, for I have seen them crossing the hills, far from any water.

Ostrich Hatching in England.

The first Ostrich ever hatched in England is now on view at the Crystal Palace, where it is occupying a "Hearson's Foster Mother," which supplies all its requirements. As might be expected, it was impossible for the parent birds to arrange for the incubation of their precious egg under normal conditions, as the burning sands of Africa are not features of the English soil. A perfectly satisfactory substitute, however, was discovered in the shape of a Hearson's Incubator, in which the egg was placed for a period of 43 days, when a healthy young Ostrich chipped the shell. It may be stated that the period of incubation in the case of the hen is 21 days, and in the duck 28 days, so the powers of the Hearson's Incubator were subjected to a severe test.

OUR FRONTISPIECE.

THE GOLDEN ORIOLE.
(Oriolus galbula.)

The Golden Oriole possesses a pleasant, flute-like voice, but its song has little variety. On the Continent, especially in Italy, it is a by no means uncommon cage pet, said to whistle and imitate fluently when reared from the nest, also occasionally to talk with surprising plainness, though the latter accomplishment is open to some doubt. Those English bird-lovers who have housed imported specimens in their birdrooms, have invariably experienced difficulty in taming them, some proving quite "unmanageable" in the sense that they have knocked about, and so damaged their plumage. A good insectivorous food is the staple item of diet, with live insects as available, and plenty of fruit. The latter item should not be stinted—cherries, figs, grapes, ripe bananas, pears, apples, etc.—as Orioles are great fruit consumers in a state of nature.

IN THE COURTS.

SWAN SHOT ON THE TYNE.

At Gateshead County Police Court on September 5th, James Phillipson was charged with having on August 23rd, in the parish of Winlaton, unlawfully, knowingly, and willingly, shot a certain bird, to wit, a swan, contrary to an order published by the Durham County Council, in pursuance of the Wild Birds Protection Act. William Jude was also charged with having had the said sawn unlawfully in his possession. George Edward Collins spoke to seeing Phillipson and Jude at Stella Haugh. On noticing the swan the defendants went away and came back with a gun. Witness saw Phillipson shoot the swan; he fired two shots. P.C. Longdon said that when he questioned Phillipson as to the swan, Phillipson said he had bought the swan from two unknown men. The Bench ordered Phillipson to pay costs, which amounted to 14s. 3d., while Jude had to pay 2s. 3d. of costs.

SKYLARKS IN THE COUNTY OF LONDON.

Fred. Clifford, a bird dealer, of Rochester-row, was summoned at the Westminster Police Court on August 27 by the R.S.P.C.A. for knowingly having in his possession six Larks, contrary to the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880.—Mr. Polhill, who prosecuted, said that on August 16 Inspector Green, going into defendant's shop, saw six Larks in separate cages. They were very wild, beating themselves against the bars of their cages, and showing every sign of having been recently taken. On being spoken to the defendant admitted that he knew the birds were protected in the County of London, but he received those in question a fortnight previously from Newcastle. Larks being good songsters, they were very much sought after by dealers, and they were now specially protected in the County of London all the year round. The defendant was a dealer of many years' standing, and must have known the order.—The defendant said he was under the impression that the close season was from March until August. He saw the birds publicly advertised, and bought them.—Mr. Horace Smith: But it is your duty to inquire what the Acts of Parliament and orders are.—The defendant: I am quite ignorant of there having been any alteration in the Act of Parliament, so is the trade.—It was stated that there had been no previous complaint against the defendant, and that he kept his shop and birds remarkably clean and wholesome.—The magistrate imposed a fine of 10s. and 23s. costs.

OUR GREAT COUPON SCHEME.

TWELVE SOCIETIES JOINED ALREADY.

Our great prize competition for exhibition cage birds seems to have caught on if one may judge by the laudatory letters received from secretaries and exhibitors. Up to the time of going to press the following societies had signified their intention of participating in the competition:—

Blackburn C.B.S., November 1 and 2.
Bristol C.B.C., November 20th and 21st.
Bolton and Dis. O and Roller C.B., November 22nd and 23rd.
Broughty Ferry, October 12th.
Dulwich and Peckham, October 17th and 18th.
Gloucester C.B.S., October 30th and 31st.
Hayle, October 16th and 17th.
Jarrow, November 29th and 30th.
Llanelly, January 14th, 1908.
Morpeth, November 16th.
Wellingboro', October 30th and 31st.
Western Counties (Plymouth), October 22nd and 23rd.

CONSIDERING THE SCHEME.

Cardiff.
Newcastle.
Perth and District.
South Shields.
Swansea.
Weybridge.
Wolverhampton and many others.

We intend electing a Committee to settle all points and disputes arising out of this scheme, and will give details concerning same later.

Show managers and committees must not overlook the fact that all profits resulting from this scheme will be divided (over 25 per cent) amongst shows participating. This may mean in the case of a show where the response to our coupon scheme is a good one, a sum of several pounds finding its way into the coffers of the Society.

WELLINGBORO & DISTRICT C.B.S.

(Show held October 30th and 31st.)

The above society would esteem it a great favour if you would grant them the patronage of your Great Prize Competition. We are all greatly in favour of it, and consider it a most valuable and generous offer to the Cage Bird fancy, and the best scheme that has ever been brought out for the benefit of increasing the fancy. Wishing your paper continued success and a still larger circulation.—W. HOWE, hon. sec., 53, Thomas-street, Wellingboro', Northants.

(Such high praise is very gratifying. Your society is enrolled with much pleasure.—ED., C.B.)

HAYLE AND DISTRICT F.A.

(Show held October 16th and 17th.)

We are pleased to accept your Coupon Competition. If I understand it correctly, the shows have only to insert the particulars of the competition, the exhibitors obtaining the coupon from you?—W. PAUL, 6, Penpol Meadow, Hayle.

(This is quite correct.—ED., C.B.)

BROUGHTY FERRY C.B.S.

(Show held October 12th.)

Your new prize competition was under consideration at our meeting on Wednesday night, and it was agreed that we participate. In the event of no bird entered for your competition winning a first prize, how would the judge be supposed to act; I mean a first in its own class, as your circular says the best first-prize bird?—C. MUIR, 1, Derby-place, Broughty Ferry.

(In such a case, which we hope will be very unlikely, the first prizes would be transferred to the seconds, the second prizes to the thirds, and so on, but in the final competition at the Crystal Palace, they would only count according to the prizes secured by them, apart from our competition. That is to say, if a second prize bird (winner of our first prize) entered for the Palace, he would have to compete there as a second prize-bird.—ED. C.B.)

LLANELLY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

(Show held January 14th, 1908.)

I am pleased to inform you your prize scheme was accepted by this society. I should like to raise one point. Supposing there was a class with only one bird entered, and the class was cancelled, how would the Prize Scheme be carried out if the owner of that bird held a "C B" coupon?—J. SIMON, 12, Tyn-Iran, Llanelly.

(In such a case, the cost of coupon would be returned, less postage, to the exhibitor, or he could have a sixpenny advertisement in "C.B.," and so save return and waste of P.O.—ED. C.B.)

MORPETH AND DISTRICT O.S.

(Show held November 16th.)

Every member of our society favoured C.B.'s new prize competition very much.—A. DIPPIE, 13, Stanley-terrace, Morpeth.

WEYBRIDGE.

DEAR MR. CARL,—Holidays have rather delayed my acknowledging the scheme of prizes you sent me on the 3th ult. As far as I can tell, I think it should work well, and be a means of increasing interest in the Cage Bird Section of shows. I will submit the matter to my committee at our next meeting, and let you know their views, which, no doubt, will be that Weybridge will join in wishing you and your paper every success during the coming season.—H. C. PARROTT, S.Y.C.C., Weybridge and District Fanciers' Society.

GLOUCESTER & DISTRICT C.B.S.

(Show held October 30th and 31st.)

I submitted your scheme to our members, and am instructed to say they are willing to co-operate, and wish to be added to the ranks.—J. HOUGHTON, Dargai, Hatherley-road, Gloster.

BLACKBURN AND DISTRICT C.B.S

(Show held November 1 and 2.)

I am instructed by our Committee to notify you that we shall be pleased to co-operate with you in your prize scheme and wish to be included. As it would be impossible to get all the matter on the sheet on one page of a schedule or catalogue, I think it would instruct all new secretaries like myself if you condensed the matter in CAGE BIRDS, and displayed the type as you wanted it. Also do you undertake to pay the money yourself to the winners, or through the show sec.?—J. W. Marsden, 44, Troop Street, Blackburn.

(1) The above is a capital suggestion, which we have adopted this week. We never intended shows to publish all matter appearing in our announcement.

(2) We pay all winners ourselves upon being notified by the secretary of their names and addresses.—ED. C.B.

GREAT HARWOOD C.B.S.

At the meeting of the Gt. Harwood and Dist. C.B.S., held last Monday, the Great Prize Scheme of CAGE BIRDS was discussed. The only objection raised against it was the printing of conditions in schedules and catalogues. The amount to be printed would take two pages in our schedule and two in catalogue; we pay something like 6/- per page for printing, and four pages would amount to 24/-. I think if CAGE BIRDS could print leaflets with conditions on and sell them to societies partaking in the scheme it would be a good thing both for societies and CAGE BIRDS. Hoping that some other society will give their views on the matter—wishing your paper and the scheme every success. — F. Sharples, sec., 85, James St., Great Harwood.

[The drawback mentioned by Mr. Sharples is not such as he appears to think. He should read our reply to Mr. Marsden, of the Blackburn Society. Only one page in schedule and catalogue need be inserted. We are quite willing to sell leaflets for insertion in schedule and catalogue, as suggested by Mr. Sharples, at 2/- per 1,000, and thank his society for pointing out what they thought was a drawback to the scheme. Criticism is always helpful.—Ed. "C.B."]

"C.B." Annual Sporting Offer on Page 150.

"CAGE BIRDS"
GREAT
PRIZE COMPETITION
Is in force at this Show.
£200 in Hard Cash.

That enterprising weekly journal "CAGE BIRDS" has promoted a Coupon Prize Scheme for the benefit of exhibitors; and by arrangement with "CAGE BIRDS" the Scheme is in operation at this Show.

CONDITIONS.

Exhibitors participating in the Competition will be required to mark each entry they make in the Competition with the letters "C.B." and to fasten to the front of the entry form an adhesive Special Coupon, to be obtained only from the MANAGER, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Entry Forms and Coupons must in every case, without exception, be sent to the Secretary of the Show and not to "Cage Birds."

There will be a fresh set of numbered Coupons for each show where the Competition is in progress. The Coupons issued for the past Shows will not be available for any subsequent event.

REMEMBER - ONE BIRD, ONE SHOW, ONE COUPON.

PRIZES OFFERED.

The Prizes offered by "Cage Birds" at each Show taking part will be

10/-, 6/-, and 4/- IN CASH,

to be allotted respectively to

The BEST FIRST PRIZE Bird, The BEST SECOND PRIZE Bird, The BEST THIRD PRIZE Bird, to be judged irrespective of sex, or variety of breed, selected from birds entered for "C.B." Competition Prizes.

IMPORTANT.

The winning birds at each Show will be debarred from winning another "C.B." prize at any subsequent event.

COST OF COUPONS TO COMPETITORS.

The cost to competitors of each Coupon will be Sixpence, and Coupons must be purchased from "Cage Birds" for each Show at least four days before date of advertised closing of entries.

THE GRAND FINAL.

By special arrangement with the Crystal Palace show authorities, at the Great National Show on January 31st, 1908, the winners of all "C.B." coupon prizes during the season up to date may compete, and the sum of

will be divided as follows:—

£5 for the best First Prize Bird,
£2 10s. for the best Second Prize Bird,
£1 10s. for the best Third Prize Bird,
£1 for the best Fourth Prize Bird, selected from birds so entered—winners of previous Coupon prizes which secure Firsts, Seconds, Thirds, or Fourths at the Crystal Palace Show.

Exhibitors must note that coupons will not by themselves entitle them to exhibit birds. Entries must be made in the ordinary way, and the cost of coupons regarded as additional fees for additional prizes.

Coupons for this show are obtainable (price 6d. each) only from F. CARL, Publisher, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London.

A PRIZE COMPETITION FOR KEEPERS OF FOREIGN BIRDS.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

Flight and Moulting.

Constant Reader.—(1) You may fly from forty to fifty Canaries in your room, but I should not recommend you to put more than six or eight breeding pairs. See that you have plenty of perch room. (2) Your two Norwich may start moulting at any time. Many birds are late this year. If you are going to put your birds in the room you mention I should recommend you to put these two in at once, whilst the weather is nice and genial. The change will no doubt start them moulting, and they will do much better than in a living room.

ROLLERS.

Answered by "SCHOOLMASTER."

A Bird Organ.

A.R.R.M.—I answered a question very similar to yours some two or three weeks back. You can get a bird-organ for use in training young Rollers from almost any of the large fanciers' specialists using our advertisement columns. Send a postcard for their price lists, or state your requirements to them. It is against the rules of the paper to recommend any individual dealer or advertiser. The mechanical organs, which wind up and run for twenty minutes or so without attention, are probably the most efficient and easy to work. Cost, somewhere about three pounds. You might be able to acquire a good second-hand one for less—I couldn't say, but an advertisement in this paper would soon show you.

Won't eat the Rape.

L. and M.—It is curious your bird should entirely neglect the summer rape seed you supply. As he scatters it all over the cage floor, I should be inclined to think you had got hold of a poor (or not genuine) sample, which he dislikes. Get a small supply from another shop, or one of our advertisers, and try the Roller with this, and see if he acts the same with it. Most birds, when they have been used to the right sweet rape will not look at a sample adulterated with hot rape (or charlock), which you might have got hold of, though you do not say whether you have recently changed your seed-man. Anyway, as the bird sings and does well on the canary seed, you have no need to worry. Give a little maw occasionally. He may eat the rape more freely when the colder weather comes.

CRESTS AND CRESTBREDS.

Answered by W. E. GREEVES.

Crested Canary with Weak Legs.

J. Buchan, junr.—Weak legs is a complaint that Crested and Crest-bred Canaries suffer from, and is noticeable in many strains. I can hold out no hope for you that it will ever get strong again, all that you can do is to put six drops of nux vomica in one and a-half ounces of its drinking water daily for four days, then miss two days, after which use three drops on alternate days for a week; be careful not to exceed the quantity named, or the effect may be the reverse of what is wanted. Your feeding is correct, use green food sparingly; in fact, you might discontinue it altogether for a time.

Crest Cock Mopy.

K.D.F.—It is difficult to determine what is the matter with your bird from the description you give. It may be a slight touch of inflammation, if so, by this time probably it is dead. It is always advisable to examine the bird's body, and to give its correct appearance, also the droppings. If your bird is still living, remove it into a cage by itself, and feed on bread and milk and canary seed, you may sprinkle on the bread and milk as much mawseed as will lay on a threepenny piece, but give no other food whatever for a week; you may add to the drinking water a few drops of Parrish's Chemical Food daily for the same time.

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Young Birds Dying.

H. Pestridge.—The little ball you mention on the rump is the oil gland, and had nothing whatever to do with the death of your birds. Judging from the description of the symptoms, I should be inclined to think inflammation of the bowels has been the cause of death, but the fact that they have been constipated rather knocks that idea on the head. I really am at a loss as to the cause of death. If another dies, send it to Mr. North for post-mortem. You will then know the cause of death, and thus be enabled to treat accordingly. However, you cannot go far wrong if you give your birds some milk-sop as soon as they appear a bit mopy, sweeten it slightly with sugar, or with treacle, and give fresh twice a day. You may also mix a little of Parrish's Chemical Food in the drinking water, just enough to make it a nice, deep pink colour.

Canary Losing Feathers.

A. Jones.—Now is the proper time of the year for your bird to moult. During the moult he will not sing, although he may make a slight twittering noise. Let the staple food be canary seed. This should be given every day in the seed hopper, three times a week you may give half a teaspoonful of the mixed seed you mention, either in a small tin or pot, or on the floor of the cage. Continue the egg food, but don't chop and change the seed weekly as you have been doing. Give enough Parrish's Chemical Food, in the drinking water, each day, to make it a nice rosy pink.

Washing Cuttlefish.

A.R.W.—The cuttlefish bone does not require soaking in fresh water to remove the salt. It is altogether a mistaken idea, which some entertain that sea salt is not good for birds, it is quite the reverse, as is evidenced by the splendid plumage possessed by birds living near the sea shore. Let your birds have the cuttlefish bone without its being soaked.

Slow Moult.

H. Briggs.—The best treatment for a bird which is moulting slowly is to keep it up in condition; don't let it get thin and weak. Mix a few drops of Scott's Emulsion in its egg food each day, and in its drinking water mix thirty drops of Fellows' Compound Syrup to each wineglassful of water. Don't worry about a bird moulting slowly. Birds vary in the manner in which they go through the moult, and it may be your bird is going quite fast enough. A capital motto is "Don't worry."

General Treatment.

Constance N.—Keep your birds well supplied with good, sound, clean Canary seed in the seed hoppers, and give twice or three times a week a small teaspoonful of the following mixture: three parts good summer rape seed, and one part of maw seed. Two or three times a week a sprig of green food or a piece of apple between the wires of the cage. See that they are well supplied with clean, gritty sand once or twice a week, either in a little vessel, or in the cage corner. I do not care for the sawdust in the cage much. I prefer sand. When the days are bright and dry you can hang the baths on, and give them the chance to bathe. They will be the best judges as to whether they want one or not.

Crossing Norwich and Greens

I have a green cock which has come from some Cinnamons; would he be a good mate for a Norwich hen which is clear bred, and would such a cross improve my Norwich; or should I pair him to a Cinnamon? What would the progeny be like?—BENNY Benny.—You are taking time by the forelock in asking a question about breeding at this season of the year. You say little about how your birds have been bred in the past, so that I cannot with certainty say that your green Cinnamon cock would or would not be a suitable mate for your yellow Norwich hen unless I knew more about your wishes and requirements, but I can answer your further question as to what would be the appearance of any progeny they might produce, and such information might guide you in choice of mates. I should like to have known how the green Cinnamon cock was bred, because if his father was a Cinnamon he might be of more use for Cinnamon breeding than if his Cinnamon blood came through the mother. Your two birds, that is, assuming you pair with the Norwich, would produce clear, ticked, and variegated dark-eyed sons and daughters of the usual colour, and also a few pink-eyed birds, that would be hens for certain, and might have clear yellow or buff plumage or Cinnamon variegation. If you would like to go in for Cinnamon breeding you should pair your green cock with a Cinnamon-coloured hen; you might then get both green and Cinnamon coloured offspring, both sons and daughters. Unless your yellow Norwich hen is unusually large, I should not advise your mating her to the green Cinnamon cock, but get a buff Norwich cock for her and a Cinnamon hen for the green bird. The chief consideration is to make up one's mind definitely what is required, and then go to work to obtain it.

Not Singing.

Novice.—It is quite possible that the bird has lost his voice through being placed in the draught from the window and door. That is, unless he is moulting, but from what you say, I gather he has not yet started to throw his feathers. Anyhow, you were quite right in giving your bird glycerine and whiskey, but as this does not appear to have made the desired improvement, give it bread and milk every day, over which put four drops of syrup of tolu. The better plan, if you manage it properly, is to give two drops of the syrup of tolu direct into its beak every morning, adding six drops of whiskey to the drinking water, all the same, give the bread and milk, but without the tolu, if given direct into the beak. Continue this for a week or ten days, and it should remove the trouble. After that time you may colour his drinking water a nice rosy-pink, each morning, with Parrish's chemical food.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by C. E. WESTON.

Siskin and Hen Canary Ailing.

W.J.S.—I should say you are about right in attributing the illness of the Siskin to overfeeding (or over-fatness). They are rare birds to put on flesh, especially when given the article of diet you mention. Put the "blue pencil" through hemp, maw linseed and egg-food, and add to the menu tenzle and a little charlock (only give a sprinkle of summer rape). Let him have a lot of ripe wild seed — plantain, groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse, thistles, etc., and also let him have a good fly round a room, if you can possibly manage it, every day. The exercise (can you turn him into an aviary or very large cage?) and change of diet will no doubt "bring back the roses to his cheeks," so to speak, in time. A few doses of dandelion juice (from a chemist) might help considerably. Give half a teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, on alternate days, for a week. The symptoms of the hen Canary sound bad, but on the meagre information you give concerning her, I really cannot arrive at any conclusion concerning the cause. I should give her a complete change of diet, the staple to be sweet biscuit (Maizena wafer, or Osborne), with a few best quality ants' eggs, just moistened with new milk. Make afresh frequently. Let her have plenty of maw seed and plain canary only; also dandelion juice as recommended above. If she pulls round, put half a teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food in the water every day until moult is concluded.

Crested Tit in Ireland.

K.D.F.—I have never seen the Crested Tit in Ireland—faith, I've never seen Ould Oireland herself (bad luck to the onaisey Oirish Channel). According to Dr. Sharpe, we have only three or four well-authenticated records of the appearance of the Crested Tit in Erin. Still, that does not prove the bird you have recently caught is of some other species. You can easily settle the point, however, by referring to the supplement given away with the last Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS, in which a very fine drawing of the Crested Tit appeared. If of this species, and " in the pink," as you put it, the bird would certainly stand a great chance on the show bench. The species is on the list of the N.B.B. and M.C. The high grade insectivorous food is quite correct to feed it on, allowing it some vegetable ingredient or other, with a few seeds (such as Canary, hemp and sunflower), and all the live insects you can collect (not overlooking mealworms). By the way, if Crested Tit proves the correct name of the bird, you certainly ought to put on record date and details of its capture.

Teaching Young Starling to Talk.

Alec.—The only method to teach a young Starling to talk is to repeat short, catchy sentences (two words at first) to it at very short intervals. You can also whistle a few catchy notes to him. Repeat the words clearly and distinctly several times before giving him a dainty such as a mealworm, beetle or other insect, or bit of fruit. He may thus associate those particular words with the appearance of a toothsome morsel of food, which fact may stimulate him to endeavour to reproduce the sounds. "Good-day," or "Good boy," would make excellent sentences to commence with. Talking Starlings are far less common, I believe, than Talking Jays and Magpies, but instances of really talented birds are on record.

In an Out-door Aviary.

C.A.B.—The design of your outdoor aviary is quite alright, with its floor well raised from the ground, sloping roof, boarded and felted, and deep weather-board arrangement at bottom. I would only suggest that you make the size another foot or two (say to 10 feet) longer and wider (say to 4 or 5 feet). The extra width would be an immense improvement; a length of six feet is not very considerable, either, for an outdoor place. Otherwise, bearing in mind how admirably sheltered it is, I think the place very practical, and one in which hardy British birds will certainly winter without any discomfort. Linnets and Goldfinches will thrive well therein. If you put nests in during the season, one or other of the couples might commence breeding operations, and present you with a few youngsters. But, as I have frequently pointed out, these operations are always more or less uncertain in a mixed collection of birds. They would pair up themselves. If you saw any of the birds particularly quarrelsome, and making themselves persistently disagreeable, you would have to remove them. There is sure to be a certain amount of bickering and squabbling in the spring. I do not know of any book on this particular subject, but possibly CAGE BIRDS may shortly be able to supply you with one.

Mule Ailing.

J.B.—Let your bird have plenty of cuttlefish and old mortar (from an old wall) to peck at, and no lack of good grit on the cage floor. Wash the drawer-board over regularly with hot water and strong carbolic soap. Let the Mule's seed-mixture for the next fortnight be canary one pint, teazle half-a-pint, and maw a quarter-pint. After that time add to it a quarter-pint of hemp. You can give green-food three or four times a week, providing it is seeding plantain, groundsel, shepherd's purse, or chickweed; also let him have a few thistle-heads. As medicine, use a little dandelion juice. Note reply to "W.J.S." this week concerning it. This should put matters right. If it does not, write me again in 14 days.

Mixed Together.

Gwendolyn.—1. It will do no harm to winter together the cock Linnet, hen Cinnamon, pair of Zebra Finches, and pair of Yorkshires, though the six birds make a pretty full complement for an aviary 3 feet by 10 inches. It is in their favour that they are perfectly friendly, and they are hardly likely to disagree until the next breeding season approaches. 2. You cannot breed with them successfully, except in separate cages. The Linnet and Cinnamon hen, and the pair of Yorkshires would (each couple) do admirably in the ordinary single breeding cage, which any cagemaker will supply you with. I am in doubt as to whether you are conversant with the practice of breeding, but if you are not, then I strongly recommend you to peruse "Canary Breeding for Beginners," a very practical and up-to-date book, obtainable for sevenpence from this office. This would put you on the right track. The Zebra Finches might breed in the aforementioned aviary, if the nesting site were screened, and a suitable nesting receptacle provided. This, however, is a matter for our foreign bird specialist, who will give you an answer in next week's issue.

Many Questions.

Linnet Lover.—I cannot identify the seed apart from the plant, except to say that it is one of the "bird-rapes" found so plentifully out in the fields. From the pod and taste I should say it is one of the "wild mustards," a near relative of the charlock. It is quite suitable to give to Linnets. The other seed (loose) is dock. Note "Wild Plant" article now running in our columns. Don't mix "wild seeds" with the ordinary seed-mixture; give same separately. You cannot get a "reliable contest singing Linnet" for two shillings, or anything like the price. You may get a bird which, if it sings the right sort of note (song) and is well trained, will eventually make a contest singer. If any man had a Linnet which he could "guarantee" to become a good contest singer, do you think he would take a few coppers for it when he knew it would eventually become worth pounds? It ought not to require much knowledge of human nature, or much commonsense to arrive at the answer. You can no doubt get a very good Linnet for the money mentioned, or for the eightpence you speak of (a friend of mine bought a Palace winner for fivepence, when "in the rough"), but don't get it into your head you have a certain contest performer, or you may suffer disappointment—singers fit to win at contests are scarce, and further, want "developing," just the same as Palace winners do. It will not do to keep two Linnets for singing purposes, in the same cage, and all wire cages 33 by 16 by 10 inches, are not suitable, box pattern cages being the best. Most birds sing better when out of sight of others; some don't mind at all, however. It is largely a matter of training.

In Variety.

B.C.A.F.C.—A cock Bramblefinch has never yet been known to successfully mate with either a hen Linnet or hen Bullfinch, so far as I know. I couldn't say whether he is at all likely to do so. I can say this, however, that the experiment (with one or the other) is well worth trying, for any undoubted progeny would be very valuable, and you would have accomplished a notable feat. I should very much like to see a Bramblefinch—Bullfinch Hybrid. The cock Bramble has unquestionably been successfully mated to the hen Chaffinch. Miss Reeves, of Wateringbury, has this year again bred several Hybrids from this mating (also with the sexes reversed). Having seen them personally, I can vouch for their authenticity. Good Reed Buntings make excellent show birds, a first-rate specimen always standing a chance of a prize. Blue and Great Tits are difficult to keep for any length of time in captivity, they "go light," and die unless restored their liberty. I have known individuals survive a fair length of time, however, with assiduous attention in the matter of live food. A closely wired box cage, about two feet long by one wide, by one and a half high, with a suitable "retiring chamber" (or screen) in it, would make an excellent house-cage.

Mating Linnet and Canary Hen.

E.D.G.—1. Purchase the hen Canary during October or November. It should then be well over the moult. If you wait until the commencement of the breeding season, all the best may be picked up. You can keep her with the Linnet right through the winter, until the beginning of February, if you like. Then separate them (not necessarily out of sight), until the hen shows signs of readiness to nest. If you can keep the two hanging within sight of each other (not actually together), or one each side the wired partition of a two-compartment breeding cage. 2. If both birds be together, canary, teazle and summer rape seeds will suit them, through the winter, as the staple food, with a feed of maw seed twice a week, and mixed (packet) Finch mixture once a week. All, or any, of the seeding wild foods I so frequently recommend in addition. 3. If you want good-coloured, shapely dark mules, for songsters, an ordinary yellow Norwich hen (variegated preferred) would answer admirably for the Linnet's mate. If she were very large, and he is a big, fine-coloured bird, the mating might produce some dark mules fit for exhibition. If you want to try for light Mules, failing a really sib-bred hen (always difficult to get) I should advocate a clear or ticked pink-eyed hen of Yorkshire type, bred from a clear strain, and a yellow if possible. By all means get a young hen (bred 1907), unless you know who you are buying from, and can thus trust to an older hen not being a "wrong 'un."

Briefiets.

A Weed (G.D.).—You are quite correct; the specimen weed you enclose is shepherd's purse.

Sunflower Seed (Constant Reader, H.C.). — Almost all seed-eating birds like sunflower seed when once they have tasted it, though some, of course, find it difficult, if not impossible, to shell, and for these it should be cracked. Hawfinches, Greenfinches, Bullfinches, Chaffinches, Crossbills, Tits, Woodpeckers, Nuthatches, and others are very fond of it.

Goldfinch Ailing (W. T.). — See reply to "W.J.S." this week, and follow the advice, as regards medicine and exercise, given therein. Also see reply to "F.F.P." last week as regards various foods, and try them. You ought to have told me how you were feeding the bird.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Weaning from Boiled Maize.

K.D.F.—The most successful way to wean a Parrot from boiled maize is, to more than half fill the seed hopper with the dry mixture, and on top of same put a layer of the boiled maize. The usual result is that in a short time it throws out the maize to get at the dry corns. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day. As regards fruit, I consider banana the most wholesome, but unfortunately many Parrots and Parrakeets, after a taste won't look at it. Try it with orange, grapes, pear, etc.—but it must be ripe—and give it such as it favours. Possibly your bird is very young, and not yet able to properly manipulate the hard seed. At any rate you must keep up the boiled maize till you find the bird eating freely of the dry mixture, and you must cease giving the maize gradually, not all at once. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in its cage. It will take to it sooner or later, as it will to most of the other items of diet advised in "C.B." Keep it out of draught, its cage strictly clean, and offer it water to satisfy its thirst three or four times a day.

What Weaver? and Treatment.

T.S.—Your description (black head and beak; orange breast and under vent; variegated back, and dark tail) is rather incomplete. If the abdomen is black and the variegated back an arrangement of browns, it is either the Napoleon or Orange Weaver. If, on the other hand, nearly the whole of its under surface is rich yellow, and the variegated back an arrangement of greenish yellow and dark brownish-olive, it is either the Black-headed or the Half-Masked Weaver; I incline to the opinion it is the latter. The value of a male in full breeding plumage is about 7/6, though I have seen them offered at the same rate per pair. They are hardy, and do well in any outdoor aviary all the year round. They pick over the soft food mixture, capture passing insects, and usually manage to get hold of one or two mealworms daily when they are thrown down for the other birds, and also take a little fruit, and are very fond of lettuce. Their staple diet is canary, millet, oats, and I see them pick up Paddy rice (rice in the husk) thrown down for the Doves and Quails.

Sepoy and Jacarini Finches.

A.L.K.M.—The gorgeous Sepoy Finch (Hæmatospiza sipahi), is a native of British India, chiefly in Nepal and Sikhim, and the Khasi Hills. The lovely geranium-red of its plumage fades in captivity. The Jacarini Finch (Volatinia jacarini) a native of South America, is really a very fine and handsome fellow, though, of course, not as gorgeous as the preceding species. He is as cheeky and self-assertive as the House Sparrow. I find Grosbeaks and Finches in my outdoor aviary eat a good bit of ripe fruit, are really gluttonous after lettuce, the same as to mealworms, and such other insects as they can get hold of. The staple seed mixture is canary and white millet. They also partake freely of spray millet, and also of paddy rice, oats, and sunflower seeds, supplied for some of the larger species inhabiting the same aviary. The Jacarini is a restless (not wild) bird, and should not be confined in a small cage, neither should the Sepoy Finch. The cage should not be less than 20 by 12 by 18 in. high, and of the box or semi-box type; personally, I should use one 10 ins. longer.

Feather-Pulling Grey Parrot.

R.T.V—There is no absolute remedy, I fear, with a confirmed feather-puller, mostly when cured so far as to be perfectly clad, they will again have lapses, and make scarecrows of themselves in a few hours. Add to the birds' diet a few white oats, and induce it, if possible, to take ripe fruit. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in the cage continuously, and let it have water ad lib. For a week put half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water every other day, and doses can be given afterwards at intervals of three days, but its bowels must not be allowed to become watery loose. Spray its plumage, principally the portions the bird is in the habit of maltreating, with quassia solution every other day, but keep it out of draught till dry. This will give a bitter taste to the feathers, and possibly deter the bird from pulling same. Note: Improvement is slow in such cases, but I have known of many cures from perseverance in the above methods. If there is no improvement you must fall back on the metal collar and light steel chain, which has been described many times in this column.

Talking Grey Parrot.

Doubtful.—I should say you have a young bird, and that its screeching is caused by fear; as it comes to know you and its surroundings, it will settle down and become more sociable. All grey Parrots talk more or less. With some, the words are picked up most readily by the method of constant repetition, that is, repeating a word or short sentence over and over again to the bird, till it is learned, and then taking up another. Some individuals will learn nothing this way, but pick up quite a large vocabulary from being kept where they hear plenty of conversation; try this latter method, with a little of the constant repetition thrown in. Parrots are often very jealous creatures, and for one bird to see you caressing or fondling the other, would be sufficient to set up a screaming competition, though cases are on record where a non-talker has been successfully trained by that method. But I do not advise it.

What Tanager?

I have a pair of Tanagers of the Euphonia group—head and neck, green; eye-circlet and mantle, turquoise-blue; back, green flaked with blue; wings and tail, green; underpart, yellow. Can you identify them?—"Euphonia."

Euphonia.—Some birds are of the family Euphoniinæ, and of the genus Chlorophonia. The species is rather doubtful, so many of these birds resembling one another so closely that identification is very difficult unless the description be very minute, but I incline to the opinion that it is torrejoni. Most of the females of this genus are similar to the males, but a little brighter in colour. They are mostly offered indiscriminately as green, all green, or blue—green Tanagers. It might possibly be viridis, if so, the back will become practically all blue, as it becomes fully matured. Here is a description of C. torrejoni, which you can compare with your bird: "Bright grass-green, rump rather brighter; broad patch on the back of the neck and eye-circlet shining blue; abdomen greenish-yellow, brighter in the middle; under wing-coverts and inner margins of wing feathers white; bill dark horn-colour; feet brown; whole length 3.7 inches, wing 2.4, tail 1.3." (B.M.C., Vol. XI.).

Blue-fronted Amazons.

Joey.—Sudden changes of diet are never wise, and in this instance while gradually getting it on to the varied seed mixture advised in this column, it would be well to have half the bulk of said mixture sunflower seed, gradually decreasing same till the quantity becomes normal. It should also be given ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, green food, etc.; not all at once, but to vary the diet. Most of the Amazons make good talkers, and as regards capacity, can only be placed second to the grey, than which a good blue-front is but little inferior; they take, perhaps, a little more teaching. If you keep your bird where it will hear plenty of conversation, it should pick up some of the short phrases it hears, as well as mimicing other sounds and calls. See also reply on Talking Greys in this issue.

What Parrakeet?

A.H.R.—I think from your description, the bird is a yellow-collar (or Twenty-eight) Parrakeet. Will give you a definite reply next week.

White Bengalee.

Is this a cage-bred bird, or is it a wild species? How is it that dealers frequently include it in their lists of wild-caught birds at 2/6 pair, and others ask 4/- or 5/- for it?—"PUZZLED."

Puzzled.—The Bengalee is a cage-bred bird, i.e., an artificial creation; it was produced by the Japanese by careful breeding and selection. It is as much a cage bird as the Canary, and has been so for a very long period, and, like the Canary, breeds better in a cage than in the aviary. Many of these birds are imported with the wild-caught species, and all that comes to hand go into the same list—dealers get aviary-bred birds by way of exchange, etc., from aviculturists, and I know on many occasions no difference has been made in the list. It is their plentitude or otherwise on the market that regulates the price, though I presume aviculturists would ask 5/- a pair, and they would be worth it. Personally, I would sooner give them away than sell aviary-bred specimens for less than 5/- a pair (please note I have none to part with at present). The pure white variety is worth 7/6 to 10/- a pair (dealers' price).

What Parrot?

I have just purchased a young green Parrot; yellow under neck, slight blue on top of head and red on wings. What kind is it? How must I feed? It is in rather bad plumage, and its bowels are very loose. Should it have a large or small cage? Will it talk, and how long will it take to settle down?—T.H.

T.H.—If it has a short tail, and is a large and stout bodied bird, it is a Blue-fronted Amazon, which I believe it to be. In such case you are dieting correctly, but continue to offer the ripe fruit, also nuts (shelled walnuts are very good), and let it have some boiled maize for a time (this only keeps fresh one day) as well as the seed mixture. Continue the chemical food, and for one day put half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia over the boiled maize, repeating the dose in three days' time. Encourage it to take a bath, and if it will not do so, lightly spray it with water just chilled on genial days, carefully guarding from draught till dry. Certainly let it have a roomy cage, but though a hardy species when once acclimatised, it must not be stood in a draught. The Blue-front, as a rule makes a good talker and mimic; keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also talk to it, and it should soon begin to utter a word or two. Individuals vary as to teachableness, and there can be no rule as to when! Keep a piece of cuttlefish in its cage, and a leaf of fresh, tender lettuce once or twice a week would do no harm.

What Parrot?

My bird is all green; red beak; a little larger than a Dove, and has a long tail. What bird is it? Will it talk? I gave 12/6 for it and cage; was it too much?—W. O. M.

W. O. M.—It is some species of Palæornis, commonly called Ringnecks, of which there are many local races and species. Your bird is most probably a female, which lacks the neck ring of the male; or it might be a young male in immature plumage. All these talk more or less; some are quite talented. If you talk to your bird, and also keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, it will ultimately pick up words and sounds. The diet and treatment for these birds have been given several times recently in this column. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatever.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Greypate Goldfinch (A.O.M.).—Inflammation of liver, lungs, and kidneys.—A large percentage of freshly-caught birds die in this way, unless skilfully fed and attended.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Pictures and Photos (Miss C.).—We have written you.

Distributing Copies, etc. (C. Marlew).—Many thanks, sir, for your good offices on our behalf.

Where to Deal with Safety (Punjab Reader).—However willing we might be to help our foreign and colonial readers, we cannot undertake commissions to purchase birds on their behalf, or recommend individual dealers at the expense of others. The advertisements in this paper must be studied carefully, and selections made therefrom. Give some recognised and responsible dealer or fancier the commission.

A C.B.U. Question (Amateurs).—Certainly it is against C.B.U. rules for members of the Union or members of affiliated societies to exhibit their birds in other people's names, or in their children's names at non-affiliated shows. Should you come across a bona fide case, you can communicate with G. W. F. Lythgoe, 25, Stamford-st., Old Trafford, Manchester.

Specimen Copies (W. Pawley).—Many thanks for your kind offer to distribute some specimen copies of CAGE BIRDS. We have had a bundle sent to your address. We wish you the best of good luck in your endeavours to stir up the local fanciers.

Solicitation (Anxious).—This is an ordinary business proceeding, imitated from us, and we don't object to it in the least, especially in view of your remark that the form comes in handy to advertisers in CAGE BIRDS.

A Novice, or not a Novice (G.W.S.).—The question of whether you are a novice or not depends to a large extent upon the individual rule on the point of each society. Different clubs have different ideas about what constitutes a novice. For instance, one club will hold that a man who wins a first in Norwich Canaries, is still a novice in the Yorkshire classes, etc. As a general rule, though, the fact that you had won a first prize in open competition (no matter how small the show), would be sufficient to disqualify you as a novice at any other open fixture.

Parrakeet's Egg (A.R.R.M.). — Address your query to our Foreign Bird Expert, and name the species of Parrakeet the egg belongs to. Latter detail is all-important.

Wallsend Smoker (J.M.).—Your report received just as we go to press, too late for this week. We must regret having to hold it over, but to ensure insertion matter should reach us on Tuesday.

Habits, Structure, and Colouration of Birds.

By J. W. CUTMORE (Taxidermist to the Liverpool Museum).

A Lecture delivered before the Manchester and Northern Counties Ornithological Society.

PROTECTIVE PLUMAGE.

The colouration of birds has its usefulness in more ways than one; it protects them from their enemies. The little warblers are difficult to find in the spring foliage, their soft green plumage blending with their surroundings. The creeper and wryneck are difficult to distingnish on the bark of a tree; the Woodcock in the dead leaves; the Nightjar on the moor lands, or sitting lengthwiso on the branch of a tree; and it is not easy to observo the Cornbunting in the brown fields, the Wheatear in the sand-pits, the Grouse in the heather, the Cuckoo, with its Sparrowhawk-like plumage, certainly finds in it a protection. In cases where the plumage of adults are alike, the young have a special plumage, such as the Robin, Hawfinch, etc. Where the hen differs, the young are generally like her. Colour, as seen in the various parts of birds, is produced by pigment, or by structure, or by the combination of the two. Three classes of colours can therefore be distinguished.

CLASSIFICATION OF COLOURS.

First, the so-called chemical or absorption colours are always due to colouring matter which may exist in the form of a solution diffused in the coloured parts, or in the form of pigmented corpuscles distributed in and between the cells of the various parts. Such colours do not change under any position of the light or eye, black, red, and brown always belong hereto, orange and yellow mostly, but rarely green, and never blue. The principal colour pigments are:—

Zoomelanin, black, an animal colouring matter, distributed in amorphous little corpuscles.

Zoonerythrin, red, such is seen in the scarlet Ibris, Red Cardinal, Cockatoo, Flamingoes, etc.

Zooxanthin, yellow, such as seen in feet and bills of birds of prey, Ducks, Geese, etc., like Zoonerythrin, it is a coloured fatty oil.

Turacin, is found in the wing of an African Plantain-eater, it is easily extracted by washing it in acidulated water, a portion of it can be removed by rain.

Turacoverdin, green pigment, is the only instance, and is only found in the African Plantain-eaters, it contains comparatively much iron, but no copper, as in Turacin.

Brown is the result of a mixture of red and black colouring matter. White is never due to pigment, in very white objects its colour is due to there being an innumerable number of interstices (narrow spaces) between its molecules (its structure), or tho air cells in its substance. The whole substance of a white feather is colourless, but its texture forms a fine network which diffracts and reflects the light.

GLOSS INDEPENDENT OF COLOUR.

The gloss of feathers is independent of the colour itself, and is the result of their horny surface being smooth and polished. The silk handkerchief adds a polish to the show birds in the same way as a bunch of cotton wadding does to the stuffed bird. The second class of colouring is called objective structural, and is produced by the combination of a certain pigment with a special structure of the colourless part of the feather. Yellow, as found in the Orioles, belongs to this class. Green, except in the one case of the Plantain-eater, is always due to yellow, orange, or greyish-brown pigment, with a superstructure which consists of narrow longitudinal ridges found in Parrots, Pittas, etc. Blue has not been discovered as a pigment, blue feathers contain only orange or brownish pigment, the blue tint appears on the outer surface structure of the feather. In the third class of colouration, the metallic colours change according to the position of the light and the eyes of the observer. The Starlings are a good example of this; the Humming Birds, Jacamars, Peacock, etc.

ALBINISM AND MELANISM.

Albinism is caused by the pathological absence of black pigment often locally produced by lesion of the pulp of the growing feather, as frequently seen in spotted Blackbirds. Melanism is produced by the superabundance of black pigment, mostly causing the feathers to assume a darker or more sooty colour, frequently seen in the Bullfinch and the Skylark.

Erythism. The abnormal occurrence of red is mostly confined to originally yellow or orange feathers, produced by abnormal food like cayenno pepper, or directly by the colour matter of Rubia tinctoria, one of the madder warts. Anyone wishing to pursue this colour question further should look up the "Dictionary of Birds," by Newton and Gadow.

NESTING AND BREEDING.

I must now pass on to the most interesting part of my subject, i.e., the nesting and breeding habits of birds. Many birds take their names from the type of nest they build. The Orioles and Cow-Birds are called hang-nests, some of the Grosbeaks are called weavers. The Australian Megapodes are called mound-birds. The Longtailed Tit, the Bottle Tit, the American Babbling Thrush an oven bird, and so on. Birds are all classed when speaking of their nesting habits under these headings:—1 Burrowing birds, 2 pensile birds, 3 building birds, 4 social birds, 5 branch builders, and 6 parasitic birds.

Our burrowing birds are the Sand Martin, Puffin, Stock Dove, Stormy Petrel, Kingfisher, Jackdaw, Sheldrake, and Woodpeckers. The Sand Martin is plentiful with us, burrowing in sand-rock is a hard task for such a tiny bird, the holes generally slope upwards to guard against water, the burrow is generally about two and a-half feet long. Few enemies can reach them, rats and weasels will not venture to climb the rocky face. Crows and Hawks sometimes snatch up the young birds as they appear at the mouth of the holes. The Kingfisher, although classed as a burrower, and is better equipped for the task, seldom excavates the whole of its burrow, but takes possession of a disused Water Vole's nest.

The Puffin, also quite satisfactorily armed with a beak suitable for excavating, generally takes a fancy to the rabbit's burrow, and evicts the rightful owner. The birds that belong to the semi-burrowing class are the Jackdaw, Stockdove, Sheldrake, and Stormy Petrel. The Woodpeckers, as the name implies, are burrowers into wood, they make no nest, but lay their polished white eggs upon the chips. The eggs of all these burrowing birds are white. With the Pensile or Hang-nests, we have nothing to do to-night, they are, with one exception, the Golden Oriole, foreign birds—the Cowbirds and Orioles of America, Orioles and Weavers of Africa and India. Some of these birds construct their nests at the extreme end of delicate branches hanging over water, the reason is to safeguard their eggs and young from the filching paws of the innumerable monkeys that swarm the forests.

BUILDERS WITH MUD.

Among the mud-builders we have many birds, but the American oven-bird is the most expert. The Pied Grallina of Australia makes a mud basin, these birds make no attempt to conceal their nests, but place them on a naked branch, or upon the top of a fence, or gate-post, the nearest approach to this mud nest is our Blackbird and Thrush. The Thrush plasters the inside of its nest very carefully and smoothly with mud. The blackbird plasters its nest inside carelessly and roughly, but adds a lining of fine grass. The Swallows and House Martins are well known to all as mud builders. The Hornbill of Africa has a peculiar habit of plastering up the entrance to its nest with the female inside the hollow tree, leaving but a small crevice to convey the food through to her while the process of incubation is going on. The Nuthatch reduces the size of the entrance to its nest by plastering part of it up with mud

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE CLUB PATRONAGE.

SIR,—It has been suggested to me that I was the author of the letter appearing in your issue of the 24th ult. over the nom-de-plume of "Frost and Snow." Will you therefore kindly grant me a small space in your valuable journal to disclaim all responsibility in connection therewith. Without the least reservation I definitely state that I was neither directly nor indirectly interested in it; nor, so far as I am aware, do I know the writer of it. While writing, may I be permitted to state that I welcome fair criticism in regard to the conduct of the officials of the S.Y.C.C., but I must admit that I consider "Pat" is very unfair, and, what is more, he is untruthful, when he states "that cliqueism is well known to exist in the club and that kissing goes by favour." Now, assuming for the sake of argument that such is the case, who is at fault—the officials themselves or those who elect them? But I fearlessly deny such allegations, and I challenge him to substantiate them, either before the committee or any other body for that matter, and although I throw down the gauntlet, I venture to say he will not have the courage to take it up, but why need he be afraid if he believes in the truth of his remarks?

R. L. CRISP.

SIR,—I was greatly astonished to learn from Pat, whose letter appeared in last week's CAGE BIRDS, that cliqueism is well known to exist in the S.Y.C.C., and that kissing goes by favour. I am in utter ignorance as to what Pat is alluding to, but as his letter appears under the heading of the "Southern Yorkshire Canary Club's patronage," I presume he alludes to this. When the patronage was alloted, ten attended the meeting, and six sent voting papers, as they could not attend, and these were taken into account at the meeting. Every member of the Committee received a voting paper with a list of shows, dates, and judges, so that they could vote, if unable to attend. As Pat has made these sweeping assertions, which are totally unfounded and unwarrantable, and are likely to prejudice the welfare of the Club, I must ask him to substantiate his charges. It having come to my knowledge, that it is being said that the letter signed "Frost and Snow" was written by me, I should like to take the opportunity to deny being the sender, or knowing who "Frost and Snow" is.

THE PIONEERS' PROGRESS.

CAGE BIRD SOCIETY AT COALVILLE.

SIR,—Will you kindly make it known through your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS that we are trying to start a Cage Bird Society at Coalville. There are many fanciers in Coalville and district, and we should like to meet together sometimes to have a little chat on birdy matters, which I think would be for the benefit of the fancy generally, and for each individual fancier. If all fanciers in Coalville and district who would like to join us, would kindly send me their name and address I will let them know when and where we shall have our first meeting. If any of your readers would give me a little advice to help in the formation of the above Society I should esteem it a great favour.

E. J. HOLMES.

THE PLUMSTEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

An Appeal.

SIR,—May I take this opportunity of asking that all Fanciers intending to become members of the Plumstead, Woolwich, and District C.B.S. will send in their names to me at once? No entrance fee will be asked from those joining by September 19th. When getting about among the Fanciers here, and asking them to join, a number have answered, "If it goes on all right I will join." Now I say to these and others who may be of the same mind, "Come inside and help make it all right; not stand and look on." Others say, "I do not exhibit." Never mind, you are interested in birds, and therefore we can interest and help you. All should remember that unity is strength, and that we cater for cage birds alone, therefore our whole attention is centred in them. I may say that the Society is carried on by up-to-date methods, lectures and demonstrations being an important feature. Hoping to greatly increase our membership at the next meeting.

FOREIGN STARLING-LIKE BIRDS.

Some Useful Observations.

SIR,—A few remarks upon the groups of Starling-like birds that form a link, as it were, between the true Starlings and the Weaver Bird may perhaps be of some little interest to your readers, seeing that this class of bird for some reason is not very often referred to. Of the true Starlings, the Glossy Starlings are fairly well known, and are doubtless imported just about as freely as the demand for them warrants. The uncommon beauty of their glossy plumage cannot be gainsaid, their chief drawback being that they are rather too noisy and cumbersome for aviaries where space is at a premium, so that most Fanciers with only small or moderate-sized aviaries must either keep only a very limited number of the Starlings or Starling-like birds, and forego most, if not all, other birds, or if other birds are kept forego these larger and more boisterous birds. Unfortunately, these remarks apply to practically all the Starling tribe. The Mynahs are the nearest approach to the true Starlings, and of these several species are pretty well known and freely imported. The common and the hill Mynahs are perhaps the most common in the market. These birds when taken in hand young and treated individually will often rival an ordinarily gifted Parrot as linguists. Nearly allied to the Mynahs are the Hangnests, which help to link that genera with the Troupial. But few species of the same are to be met with in our markets, the Brazilian being about the most common, though the Baltimoro Hangnest is fairly well known. They succeed well as cage birds, and make very excellent, if not quite ideal, pets. In their habits they are naturally largely frugivorous, or fruit-eaters, and need to be treated accordingly. Their food in confinement must contain a good proportion of ripe fruit, and insects, larvæ, and so forth must also form a prominent item. They are on the whole gifted with musical talent of a higher order than the general run of the Starling tribe. The Brazilian Hangnest is also a handsome plumed bird in a general tone of fiery orange colour, with a strongly contrasting black hue on the head, throat, wings, tail, and middle of the back. The female is smaller and her colour less bright. Next comes the Military Troupial, of which only the common species and De Filippi's need be mentioned. The former at least is freely imported, and both are pretty and interesting birds. The Marsh Troupial belongs to a different genera, which links the last-named genus to the Meadow Starlings. It is not very difficult to obtain, as a few are generally to be found in the market. It has been credited with some musical ability, and is a hardy and long-lived bird. In the aviary it requires a plentiful supply of insect food, and soft food and fruit should also form a regular item. Closely allied to the latter species are the true Meadow Starlings, of which the Red-shouldered—more popularly known in the United States, where it is frequently kept as a cage bird, as the Red-winged Blackbird—and the Brown-headed, often called the Brown-headed Marsh Troupial, are most likely to come within reach of the aviarist. The former is least often imported, but the latter appears at times in sufficient quantity to bring the price down to a reasonable figure. It is also gifted with song—that is, of course, as Starling song usually goes, which is not invariably the most melodious.

The Cow-birds also belong to this tribe of Starling-like birds, and are pretty freely imported, so that one or more species are almost always on the market. The Silky Cow-bird—not Cowper Bird, please, as a literary field-naturalist once called it—is one of the, if not quite the, most commonly imported species. They are hardy, very easy to keep, and possess the usual merits and failings from different points of view of the Starling in general. Perhaps their greatest drawback is in being nervous, excitable, and somewhat wild. The last I shall mention is that species immortalised alike in prose and verse—the Bobolink. The exquisite beauty of its song has been the theme of many a talented writer; nevertheless, it is questionable whether its singing powers so far exceed those of our British Starling. It is rather a shy and nervous bird when first confined, and doubtless it is much more difficult to procure specimens of late by reason of the restrictions placed on the exportation of certain birds by the United States Government. But when obtained it is, in common with its near relatives, easy to manage and keep in health. In its seasonal change of plumage it shows its near approach to birds of the Weaver tribe, although its proper place is certainly amongst the Starling-like races under review, which are well worthy the attention of aviarists who have plenty of space wherein to accommodate them.

STURNUS.

A PLAGUE OF MICE.

SIR,—I can safely say that if Mr. Wilcock will follow my instructions he will get rid of the little torments. Get six little saucers, place one at the bottom of each support, then get one quart of gas tar and half a pint of paraffin, mix well together, fill each saucer, and what is left place in an old saucer and put in the middle of the room.

W. HALLAM.

REMEDY WANTED FOR PLAGUE OF EARWIGS.

SIR,—Could any reader please say what is the best remedy for keeping earwigs out of the aviary, as they disturb my canaries so at night? I cannot find any in the daytime, but directly it gets dark the place is fairly alive with them, both on the floor and on the wires in the flight. I have tried lime and smoke, but they do not make any difference. The aviary is 7ft. long, 7ft. high, and 4ft. wide, and stands 12in. off the ground, and is built of wood. I have 24 canaries in it. I have not much room in the yard to shift things about.

LOUGHBORO.

NOW THEN, LINNET SINGERS! MIND THE NAIL.

SIR,—About eight years ago I was the proud owner of one of the best quality singing Linnets in England. As a contest bird he had few equals. In his first contest he defeated 44 of the best picked birds in Yorkshire, a good performance, he being only a youngster. But a still better was in store, for a week later I took him to Dewsbury, and he there defeated 37 of the best birds they could possibly find. In this contest he was running and turning in the deepest tone possible to get from a Linnet, without the slightest click or jar of any description. At this contest I had £5 offered for him. In his second and third year he defeated something like 600 or 700 birds (not altogether, of course, but 20 at one contest and 30 at another, and so on). I had him trained to perfection; the bird knew me as well as I knew him. I took him to a Leeds gentleman's house to let him hear it. We put a nail in the wall near the door. This gentleman, who understands a Linnet, after this performance wrote a letter to a certain Hull fancier, saying he had heard the "finest Linnet in the world." This Hull fancier arrived in Leeds a few days later, and we journeyed to the Leeds gentleman's house to hear the bird sing. He was put on the same nail, and when he had been up a minute he broke with reeing, making four beautiful turns in it, and running into blubbering, making three turns in that, a beautiful break. Then, alas, the nail came out of the wall, the bird falling to the floor and being killed instantly, no blame attaching to anyone, as it was a pure accident. This bird came from the same place as my present champion.

HARRY ALLEN.

QUAKERS THAT TALK.

SIR,—With regard to some information given in, I think, August 24th issue of CAGE BIRDS by Mr. Wesley Page regarding Parrakeets, may I speak from experience? He says that never has he come across a Quaker Parrakeet ("grey-breasted" from Monte Video) that could speak. I have a pair of them, Myopsittamus monachus. The cock bird I have had 4½ years. He can say all sorts of things that I have taught him without the slightest trouble, no teaching with the cage covered up, simply repeating short sentences. He says, "God save the King," "Polly, put the kettle on," "Polly, take it off again," "Oh, dear, what can the matter be," "Kiss Polly," "Dear little Polly bird," "Shut the door," "Come along, come along," etc. Whenever I go into the room he always makes some remark, he also imitates the cackling of a hen precisely. The hen bird is not so good, but says a few things. I have not had her a year yet. Both are perfectly tame, and eat out of my mouth. Barring the noise of their "singing!" one could not have more interesting Parrakeets. They don't say things they hear promiscuous people say, but listen most attentively, and learn very quickly. The cock bird also imitates the sound of brushing clothes when I brush mine. I write this thinking it may interest you, and, as a keeper at the parrot-house at the Zoo told me, I might have had a dozen of these birds and not got them to speak, it seems rather interesting. A friend told me she had never heard any Parrot speak more distinctly. Unfortunately, they won't talk before everyone, being very timid little birds. The cock bird feeds the hen regularly out of his crop. They are in a large cage, and I let them out twice a day, when they generally sit on the top.

M. B.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

PROPER TREATMENT OF CHAFFINCH.

SIR,—The article by "On the Watch Tower" makes me feel I must write about my Chaffinch for CAGE BIRDS readers, for by the following you will see my bird gets all the luxuries that "On the Watch Tower" seems to think these lovely birds never get in captivity. My Chaffy was hand-reared in 1895, he has a cage 13in. x 18in x 13in. high; every morning I let him out of his cage for a fly in the room (some days during the afternoon, too), and he bathes in a floating, hollowed-out wood bath on the top of a fish aquarium, where I have a spray or shower, which I can turn over the bath if I like; you may be sure he enjoys this. As regards insects, he catches these himself; no flies, blue-bottles, or moths remain in the room long while my Chaffy is out; I also give him mealworms, ants eggs, grass in flower, and any wild green stuff I can get. He is finger tame with me now; I only have to snap my fingers and call him, and he comes; even without any food in my hand he comes just the same, and pecks at my fingers just like Bullfinches do when they get very tame. It is a large room he flies in, and it is a pretty sight to see him flying across the room to meet me. He will do much the same to strangers when they have been in the room some little time. Just now he is moulting, and will only come to me occasionally, because, of course, it is a trying time for him. There is one thing this Dickie greatly objects to, and that is hats. If anybody, lady or gentleman, enters the room with a hat on, my Chaffy is off like a shot, and will not come near them until they remove it. I do not believe much in handling birds, or, at least, I like to make sure they are really naturally tame before I do, because I believe it frightens them very much. If there is occasion for me to handle my pet Chaffinch I put my hand over his back, and he perches on my thumb. In this way I have no need to hold him tightly, and can stroke and caress his head. This he evilently likes by the "Pink-pink" he gives. Of course, he will feed from my fingers, also from my mouth. I can put a hemp seed on the back of my tongue, and he will put his little head right inside of my mouth to reach it. When I wish to get him back in his cage I either wait until he goes for food or call him over with a hemp seed, and in he goes, and I quietly shut the door. If I am reading a book he will come and perch on the edge of the leaves, and presently away he flies to sing his charming song, which I love to listen to; so you see he gets the best of everything, and in return makes a charming pet.

WHERE DO THOSE PLAGUEY LITTLE RED MITE COME FROM?

SIR,—We have from time to time had some wonderful theories about this pest of the bird-room, and remarkable statements, too, such as their inability to run about on glass, which supposed fact was discovered not so very long ago by an experimentor, who doubtless tickled the wretches to death in the race, and misunderstood the cause of the fatality. Now we have a very ingenious discovery of the cause of infection, but, unfortunately, though I do not mean it unkindly, this is probably an error of observation. The tiny white insects found in the seed bought in packets were mites in one sense of the term (or, perhaps, it would be more correct to call them weevils), I have no doubt. But it is extremely unlikely that they were in any way related to the pest of the bird-room any more than is the cheese mite, which can be found like a white dust about old cheese. The mites in the seed were undoubtedly in their natural sphere, as there is quite a variety of these mites (or weevils) which infest grain and seeds of various kinds. But they are in no way related to the red mite we all know only too well. The latter mite is, in fact, not so far removed from the thrips or red spiders. What those white insects in the seed proved was that the seed had been badly stored, or was very old (perhaps both), and incidentally it should help to show that the best and safest method of feeding one's birds is to buy seeds separately, when one can see the quality and mix them as required. Packet seeds, if kept in stock months, or it may be years, at a time, can scarcely fail to deteriorate in quality. But there is one means of spreading the pest of red mite—not generally thought of or suspected—and that is mice. Where these rodents exist in a bird-room they act as vehicles to convey the mite from cage to cage, and from one room to another, just as they may also prove a most dangerous, although unconscious, means of spreading any contagious disease broadcast among a stock of birds located in different rooms. Mice are, indeed, a pest that cannot be too stringently kept at bay.

FREE TRADE UPHELD.

SIR,—Clubs are making "Protection" with a vengeance, and in my opinion in their narrow mindedness going the wrong way to get the honesty that they aim at. For instance, one man must make only one kind of show cage, or the exhibitor is disqualified, and another man another kind, and now, I see, for the Liverpool Green Club one man only the paint. Great Scot! I expect next that one man will have to make all the breeding cages for a certain club, for birds to be bred in them only, and that a visiting committee will be appointed to see that they are bred in such. I might suggest this. I think it will be original. This same thing applies to judges only being appointed that are members, thus limiting the scope. Herein is the whole crux of unfair and inferior judging, in my opinion. Instead of instituting this silly thing for honesty they should open the field wide for judges, and select, not the cheapest man—the man that often looks at it for an advertisement or the chance of picking up a cheap bird for himself, or a customer—they should select competent, fearless, and honest men, not dealers, or part dealers. If you had an honest and fearless man no exhibitor or hundred exhibitors, tricksters, committeemen, secretaries, different cages, or anything would count; in fact could not count. Yet this does not seem to be grasped as the only way by all these wonderful brains combined, with all their meetings, lectures, etc. Yet, what a simple fact! There are only two ways of doing anything—one right and the other wrong. In this case it is always the wrong—absolutely blind they must be. There are some of these good men judging now. But, alas! how many? And there are some of the others—that is certain to those who can see, and will see. How are the dog shows conducted? Owners and their men show the animals before the public. These judges are not frightened, nor do they get nervous; but in the big majority of cases they do their duty, and do it well. DISGUSTED.

THE CAGE-BIRD UNION AND NON-UNION SHOWS.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. C. Crane re C.B.U. and non-affiliated shows I see Mr. Lythgoe warning members of the C.B.U. that if they show at a non-union show they are liable to be suspended. Now, sir, I should like to know what the exhibitors are going to do who belong to the C.B.U. at our Derby at the Great Glass House? Are the members of the C.B.U. going to be allowed to show there? The reason I ask is because I see by your list of shows they are not starred. If they are not affiliated to the C.B.U. are all the members of the C.B.U. going to be debarred? If so, I am afraid it will be a poor look out for the big glass house. I thought when the union was started it was to improve the fancy, the welfare of the exhibitors, and reduce the railway charges, but it seems to me as if it is to force every fancier to join it whether he approve of it or not. I don't see how it will stop any more wrong-doing, or faking, than before, as I think in the past a great many more of the frauds have been found out by Fanciers visiting shows than by the show committees. I think what Cage Bird Fanciers want is a kind of a club formed, so that in case of a law-suit they would have something to fall back on, and also to compensate exhibitors for loss of birds at shows, and sometimes by rail. I don't think there are a great number of our present-day show managers who want any one to give them advice re their show, and if there was any fraud they could deal with it. I think when it was made known, that other societies would not take their entries at their shows when they knew of it. We don't want to stop Fanciers from exhibiting. Let them all come. I think if there was a club started something similar to what I have often spoken about it would be a grand thing. We send our birds to shows now, and have to take all risk while on rail, also at the shows too, and it is generally the best bird which goes first.

C. H. COOPER.

Yorkshire Union and the C.B.U.

The question of the Cage Bird Union patronage was raised at the meeting of the Council of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S., held September 7th, writes Mr. Fred Hammond, the secretary, and it was decided to allow societies a free hand in the matter of applying for same, with the distinct understanding that the Council would recognise no rules as superseding or prevailing over their own. Yorkshire Union shows are held under Yorkshire Union rules, and where these conflict with any others, either of Societies, other Unions, or Specialist Clubs, the Yorkshire Union rules alone are recognised, and the Society holding such a show is held responsible for the carrying out of any ruling which the Yorkshire Union Council may make. It is therefore desirable that societies making application for outside patronage (and any club or union granting same) should keep these facts fully before them.

CAME HOME TO ROOST.

SIR,—My brother in November of last year purchased a fresh caught chaffinch, and kept him in an aviary indoors all the winter. In the spring he decided to keep chickens, and set to and built a house at the bottom of the garden, using small mesh wire netting to keep the sparrows out. Thinking the chaffinch would like a little more liberty, he accordingly let it fly in the run along with the chickens. One morning he went to give fresh water, and accidentally left the door open, when "Chaffie," seeing his chance, flew out and away. My brother went to business thinking he had lost his bird, but upon his arrival home in the evening he found to his great astonishment there sat "Chaffie" waiting to go to roost, and on the door being opened at once flew in. This happened at Tooting. I thought it might interest your numerous readers. E. H. HULL.

WARMING AN OUTSIDE AVIARY.

SIR,—Can any of your readers advise me as to the best method of warming an outside canary house? It stands in a sheltered position, and is about 6ft. square. Would there be any evil result from using a small gas jet? I shall be grateful for any advice.

W. H. DAVERS.

THE FEEDING OF YOUNG HYBRIDS.

SIR,—As a reader of your valuable paper for some years, and being specially interested in the able articles appearing from time to time, I would just like to endorse the opinion of "Argyle" in his able article on hybrids. I have a bullie hen that was hand-reared in 1905. She was left untried the next year, and came into my possession last July. I put her up with a five-year-old goldie cock, and in a few minutes they paired up. She dropped an egg two days later, which was broken. After a few days' rest she went to an ordinary felt nest, and laid a clutch of four eggs. I had two full eggs set under two canary hens, both good feeders, the first hatched was a large bird, and lived for seven days, but, alas, was found dead on cage bottom. It must have fallen while being fed, the second one in a nest of canaries only lived two days. I fancy it never was fed, although the canaries were reared all right, the third one, under a hen who never failed this year, died at four days, and so my hopes were dashed to the ground, but my appetite for hybrids has certainly been enlarged. I was highly pleased when I saw them in the nest, their skin was very red, and they were covered with long black down. I fed on egg and biscuit with plenty of green food. Perhaps some of your numerous readers who have been successful might give us beginners a hint as to feeding young hybrids. I mean to try again, but next time with a clear crest-bred cock canary. Wishing your paper all the success it richly deserves. MACK.

WHOLESALE DEATHS THROUGH DRINKING WATER.

Was it Bird Fever?

SIR,—I don't think the sad loss of the 110 Canaries recorded in the letter in your correspondence columns from "T. Booker" had anything to do with the heavy drinking of water, in which he says they indulged. The water drinking would merely be a symptom of the real trouble, and the latter seems most likely to be "feverishness," and probably due to the dreaded "bird fever," which he has by some means got into his room. It has often been pointed out in CAGE BIRDS how difficult (almost impossible) it is to drive out the germs of bird fever once they get a hold in the bird-room. Your correspondent might have got new cages (as he says), but if he omitted to thoroughly sterilise the room and the utensils this would be in vain, for the new cages would become infected when put in the room. Mr. Booker ought to have had a dead body examined by post-mortem, when the presence or otherwise of the bacilli that set up bird fever would soon have been known to him. The room and its contents would require to be thoroughly fumigated (being stripped of any wallpaper, etc.). "Sulphur candles" (I believe they are so called) and things suitable for the fumigating can be bought cheaply from any good store chemists—they are used in cases of fever among human beings. When this has been well done, and the cages and room distempered out, and the utensils washed in a hot boric acid solution, then your unfortunate correspondent might hope to keep a stock of birds again without being troubled with the looseness of the bowels, abnormal drinking etc., all symptoms of "bird fever." But unless he takes very thorough measures he is not likely to do much good in the old room, and with the old cages and appliances. Old fanciers say that anyone with bird fever in his room can carry the germs on his clothing into another fancier's room—a bird from an infected room is, of course, the height of danger. C. ELEGANS.

THE DIPPER IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—Some months ago I enquired of your Mr. Weston the best birds for an aviary I had just erected. He advised me to try to keep a pair of Dippers therein, as well as other commonly kept birds. I got a nest and hand-reared a couple on small fish, caddis grubs, dragon-fly, larva, and tadpoles. They did very well, and when able to fend for themselves I transferred them to the aviary, which is 30 feet long, 20 wide, and 10 high, with a substantial brick shelter 6 feet square. Through the centre flows a small stream, deep, but slow. I fixed the wire-netting so as to prevent escapes under the water. Near the end there is a small, rocky hill about 3 feet high, which I planted with low furze and heath. Here a pair of Linnets nested, and Goldfinches and Wagtails also bred. I may say that the bushes are firs. The aviary is well protected from the weather, and Willow Wrens, Chiffchaffs, and Long-tailed Tits have successfully moulted in it. The food I supply is live ants' eggs, green caterpillars, some small sprats for the Dippers, who also get caddis grubs, small trout, etc., out of the stream, and "Trowers's "Ceeto," with canary rape, teazle, and maw in pans for the seed-eaters. I give Shepherd's Purse, chickweed, dandelion, sow-thistle, and blighted sprays. The birds drink and bathe in the stream.

(MISS) D. K. FITZMAURICE.

[No doubt many of our readers will, with ourselves, be glad to hear further of this interesting aviary and its inmates.—ED.]

SCOTTISH BRITISH BIRD AND MULE CLUB MEDALS.

SIR,—May I ask the select party of members of the S.B.B. and M.C. what is their motive for again disallowing the medals to Bathgate Cage Bird Society, this being the second time in three years? I am quite safe in saying that there is not another Society in Scotland which offers a better classification for British birds and Mules than the Bathgate Society. How it has been again disallowed the medals I am at a loss to know, the more so seeing that medals have been granted to a Society that is non-existent, namely, Broxburn! I think it is high time the rule anent the voting of medals was amended.

A MEMBER.

Moulting and Colour Feeding the Norwich Plainhead.

A Lecture delivered before the Members of Coventry O.S. on Sept. 11.

By J. A. ECKERSLEY.

My lecture to-night treats of one of the most interesting, if not the most interesting, phases of our fascinating hobby. Even to the majority of those breeders who, for various reasons, draw the line at pepper feeding, the transformation season, if I may so term it, presents opportunities for the exercise of skill and judgment, for the testing of theories, and the employment of a variety of innocent little adventitious "aids to beauty" that, it is fondly hoped, will enhance not only the charms of the feathered pets, but the reputation of their owners.

WARMTH OF COLOURING.

Nay, if there be, in these latter days, a fancier who relies solely upon breeding to obtain sufficient warmth of colouring to attract the judge's eye, in the so-called "Natural Colour" classes, even he will be indulging in the pleasures of anticipation, for his best youngsters may assume a garb of much warmer, richer hue than that which they developed in the nest. And here let me observe that since it is certainly possible by selective breeding only, to produce a very suspicious looking depth of colour, the judge's task in dealing with natural colour classes is often a very unenviable one, for in not a few cases it is practically impossible to decide with certainty whether or not the boundary line of legitimate "assistance" has been overstepped; and it behoves him to exercise the utmost caution, and in every case where there lingers the least doubt in his mind, to give the bird the benefit of it. Better, by far, pass a dozen equivocal specimens than cast stigma upon one upright fancier.

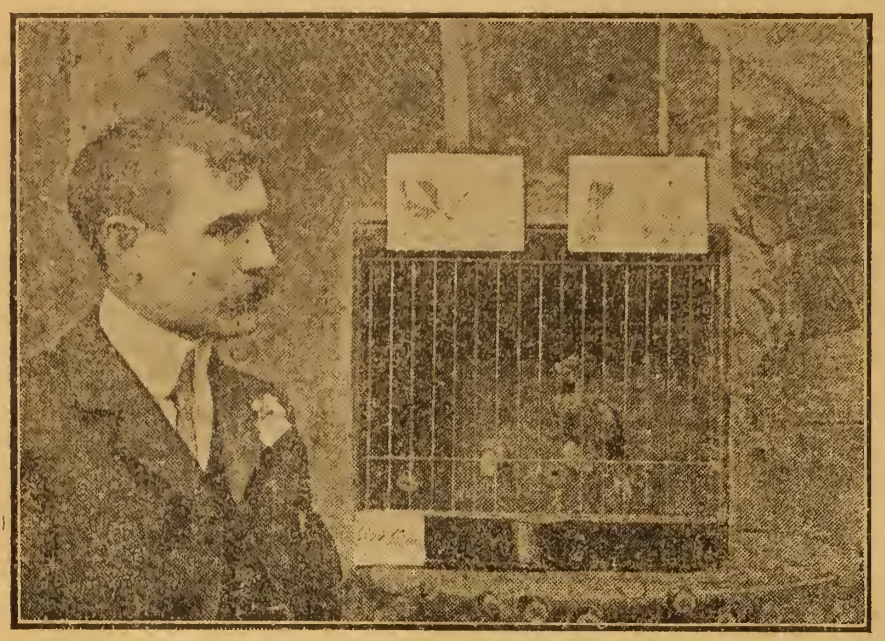
THE GENESIS OF COLOUR FEEDING.

Prior to the year 1871, colour feeding as we now understand the term, was unknown. We may take it for granted that the rivalry amongst fanciers was just as keen then as it is now, and the efforts to "break the record" in the matter of colour production untiring. Indeed Mr. Blakston placed it upon record that "anything yellow that the bird would eat was supplied to it; no matter what it was, or whether it was a substance the bird could digest and assimilate: so long as it was yellow, that was sufficient; and we have heard of the most extraordinary compounds having been adminstered in the shape of pills, powders, draughts, anything and everything, anyway and every way, no matter what or how, if colour might only be born of it." "But," I quote Mr. Blakston again, as I shall have occasion to do more than once before I have finished, "the entire exhibition world was destined to be revolutionised by one important discovery which was made in 1871.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

In the search after the philosopher's stone, an explorer "struck ile." In other words, someone, in his anxiety to go one better than his rivals, experimented upon his birds with K.N. pepper, and probably shed rapturous tears when he beheld the result. These birds did not, however, at once carry everything before them on being exhibited. The discoverer of this wonder-working feed did not disclose his secret, but gave his fellow fanciers to understand that he had hit upon "a superior combination of blood," and that the marvellous colour was peculiar to the unique breed or strain which he had in his possession.

This was too much for the credulity of the Fancy, and the birds were received with great suspicion. "Some of the best breeders of the day examined them, and though all known tests failed to show that the colour was due to any outward application, yet one mysterious fact stared them in the face:—the birds were two colours." This "was the pill no one would swallow," and was regarded as "the consequence of unskilful dyeing . . . . Every breeder, however, now knows that this appearance arose simply from the presence of feathers which had grown before the birds had been put on the colour producing diet, which, even in the very best specimens, appear absolutely green beside the rich, ruddy orange now so common." These birds figured at the Palace in February, 1873, and some of them were v.h.c.



DERBY TO THE FORE.

In February, 1873, Mr. Edward Bemrose, of Derby, one of the best known fanciers of the day, exhibited two cayenne fed birds at the Palace, but, although he asserted on his word of honour as a gentleman that he had moulted them himself, and that they owed their extraordinary colour to nothing but the peculiar diet on which they had been fed, he, also, fell under suspicion of having laid on the colour from the outside, or, at any rate, of being an accessory, before or after the fact. Before he left the show, however, "he delivered himself of a promise, which he fulfilled almost to the letter, that next season he would bring out, not two, but a string of birds which he would send to every show in England, and with which he would take every prize, from Whitby, in September, round to the Palace show again in 1874, and that when he had thus vindicated his character, he would give the secret to the world. And he kept that promise. Next season he was invincible, and the exhibitors in the Colour section of the Canary family lay under his feet. Some accepted their defeat like men and others writhed and wriggled like worms. In some directions, confidence began to grow, while the now historical birds fearlessly travelled the country."

THE NORWICH ORDEAL.

But in October of the same year, 1873, at the great Norwich show, "several of the Norwich breeders protested in a body against the genuineness of a consignment of these birds," with the result that seven of them were selected for analysis, and, of course, came out of the ordeal with flying colours. Shortly after this Mr. Bemrose "published in the 'Journal of Horticulture' the grand secret of the extraordinary colour of the birds which had so completely demoralised the whole canary world.

(To be continued).

MR. BARWELL, OF NORTHAMPTON, AND HIS WINNING HAWFINCH.

BARWELL'S HAWFINCH.

A Noted Winner from a Selling Class.

I first saw my winning Hawfinch at the Wellingborough Show of 1906, where it was shown in the 15s. selling class. That keen judge of a Britisher, Mr. Frostick, of London, claimed him. I looked him over well, and came to the conclusion that with care he would make a winner. So far as I could judge he had all the points about him needful in a first class Hawfinch, but he was in bad condition and had no tail. The more I looked at him though, the better I liked him, and at the end I gave Mr. Frostick half-a-sovereign for his bargain, and the bird remained in Northants instead of going to London. Having got him home I at once began to improve his condition. I kept him out of doors all through the moult, gave him a bath of soft water every day, attended carefully to his food, and so well has he repaid my efforts that he has won eight first prizes and five specials, including one for the best British bird in the show at Carmarthen. These winnings have proved the correctness of my judging in buying the bird from Mr. Frostick, and I am indeed proud of him, for he has not only caught the eyes of the judges, but the reports in CAGE BIRDS have spoken most highly of his merits, all of which has been most gratifying to me. On his return from Carmarthen he went into moult, which has gone right through, and now he is in grand form again, and ready for, I hope, another successful season.

Being one, of five sons of an old Fancier, I, as a boy, naturally took a little interest in birds, and started my career between school hours, in catching what I could in iron traps. I have never lost sight of the ways and means of catching, nor been without a bird of some kind since my schooldays. I started work rather young and was able to buy a pair of nets, and go out netting a few birds, out of which my father used to find some useful to him as a fancier. Seeing my leaning towards the Fancy, he taught me a great deal about birds, which I find very useful to-day, and which has largely helped me in my successful attempts on the Show Bench. One of the things he told me was how the washing of birds came first in this town; he stated that it was first thought about forty years ago, when he and Mr. T. Irons had one bird each washed, and sent out to a show at Whitby, where they took first and second respectively. Now going back to my own experience. I followed very closely all sorts of birds, but fixed my mind on Britishers for my favourite hobby. The photo above represents me and my favourite winning Hawfinch, and I will now tell you how I moulted and fed this bird. I kept it out of doors all through its moult, gave it a soft water bath every day, and fed it chiefly on all sorts of fruits, a few sunflower seeds, monkey nuts, tiger nuts, etc., which I believed helped it along, and are good for a Hawfinch, and I found it proved very successful to me, taking a great interest in this special kind of bird. As regards smaller British Hardbills, I do a lot of catching, from which I find a lot of useful birds. I always moult them on wild seeds, which are very plentiful in this county, and hold a great advantage over other foods. I pick out the seeds to the best of my abilities to suit each kind, as I follow them as close as I can in their wild state, and I am pleased to be able to say that I have moulted good show birds. I used not to show any birds myself, but on the death of my father in 1904, I joined the local society, of which he was the founder. I exhibited first of all in the open classes for members, and was so successful, that I lost my chance for the Novices', in which most beginners start. I have since then been very successful in open shows in different parts of the country, winning a few first and other prizes. I have gained my knowledge of birds by seeing and hearing of the work of other Fanciers, and from my own experience. I would urge all young Fanciers to learn not only to wash, but how to stage their own birds. I may say that I make most of my breeding and show cages myself, as I find it very useful to me to be able to suit my own birds. I think I have told you all I know of my life-long experiences as I am but a young Fancier, being only 31 years of age, but I hope to continue in the Fancy as long as I am able to do so.—C. BARWELL.

A WELL-KNOWN CORNISH FANCIER.

Mr. F. C. Collins (Camborne).

With reference to the photograph of Mr. F. Collins, reproduced in our issue of last week, that well-known Camborne fancier writes:—I shall be pleased to give you a few notes concerning my experience as a fancier. I have kept birds ever since I was about 12 years of age; I have never been without them from that time. But it was about six years ago that I started exhibiting, and I may say that since 1901 I have won over 300 prizes, including three silver cups, two gold and silver medals, one bronze medal, and 14 silver medals. I am a great lover of the small British Hard-bills, and with them I have done very well on the show bench. All my British birds are kept and moulted in outdoor aviaries, which I find the best for them. I have also Norwich Plainhead and Crested Canaries, which I have been very successful with, having won with my young birds, and had them claimed at catalogue price. But my chief fancy is the breeding of Mules and Hybrids, of which I have a splendid lot, including a young Greeny Bullie, Siskin Canary, and Dark Goldie Canary, which I bred this year, and hope, with a good moult, to place on the bench. I have also a six-point Goldie Mule, which has not been beaten this year, and has won the special for best bird in show twice under different judges. I take a deep interest in show work, being a member of the N.B.B. and Mule Club and general secretary of the Camborne and County Fanciers' Association.

THE FIREFINCHES.

By MRS. HAUTENVILLE COPE.

Asking questions does not always mean an absence of information; sometimes it means only that one wants to add to one's knowledge by ascertaining how much other folks know on a subject.

The particular questions I wanted answered were as to the species of Firefinch (Lagonosticta) I had brought from a bird dealer. He assured me they were "just ordinary Firefinches," but the regular triangular patch of small white spots extending from under each wing was different from a Firefinch I possessed some years ago. "Them with the whitest spots is the hens," he said. There again I felt uncertainty, so I bought several to see what happened.

MISFORTUNES AND REMEDIES.

The story is a sad one, for out of the number both genuine hens died, as did also one of the birds in colour. This one was never of such a rich cherry-colour as the rest, and had no side-spots. I should have pronounced it a badly-coloured cock Firefinch had not I twice seen a genuine cock in my possession pair with it. They built but did not lay.

To add to my uncertainty, I visited the Zoological Gardens and was surprised to find birds similar to mine labelled Lagonosticta rufopicta, while as Lagonosticta senegala they have a larger, duller Firefinch, more like Lagonosticta congica. Somehow at the Zoological Gardens the labels seem to have got mixed, for Lagonosticta brunneiceps there resembles senegala at Kensington.

ONLY APPRECIATED IN REAL LIFE.

These lovely little Finches can only be thoroughly appreciated in real life; the dried skins give little if any idea of the birds' shape, but if the Zoological Society manage to keep alive the lovely Waxbills they possess it will be extraordinary, as they are being fed on canary seed, Algerian millet, and rape, with spray millet and fresh grass. Now in their native land these little birds are almost entirely insectivorous, or live on minute fresh seeds. Besides, they require sleeping-boxes and a covering at night. It is impossible for them to exist for long on dry hard seed. The test with all birds as to whether they are flourishing on the diet and under the conditions in which they are kept is that the plumage should have on it that indescribable bloom seldom seen in cage birds.

Foreign Finches, especially the rarer kinds, soon lose this gloss; they become dishevelled and bald, till finally death delivers them from captivity. Years ago I carefully studied alapecia, or baldness, in these little Finches, till I discovered the remedy.

MUSEUM RESEARCHES.

When I asked questions about Firefinches in bird newspapers, I was referred to the "bird-skins" in South Kensington Museum, so thither I went at once to investigate as to what a Firefinch was, or rather, how many different sorts of Firefinch are known to exist. The stuffed birds on the museum shelves in the Bird Gallery gave me no information; one dingy decrepid little specimen was all I could discover. But for scientific purposes the skins of foreign birds are stored in drawers in the Bird-room, and these were shown to me most courteously by Mr. Chubb.

The Firefinches are "Lagonosticta" under the present nomenclature, but under older ornithologists they ranked as "Estrelda," I believe.

Firefinches, however, may be sub-divided into three varieties. Under the first I will put the smaller specimens, with soft, pink, shell-like beaks and distinct yellow rims to the eyes. The smallest, of which South Kensington possesses only two skins, is labelled Lagonosticta senegala. Both apparently are cocks. The colour is a vivid scarlet red, and no white side spots are to be seen, though Dr. Butler says the hens have spots. It is very decidedly smaller than any of the rest, about 3 to 3½ inches long only; the legs and feet light. Though apparently called the Common African Senegal Firefinch, it is most uncommon. I have never seen any for sale.

THE FAMILIAR FIREFINCH.

Next in size is "the Firefinch" of the English bird dealers, Lagonosticta brunneiceps, or the brown-headed Firefinch, from the patch of brown at the back of the head, which never changes, although the rest of the bird turns a glowing ruby red when in colour. This bird is also known as Lagonosticta minima or minuta. Under each wing there are white spots in triangular patches. They are bright little birds, an ornament to any aviary, with a very sweet, canary-like chirp and a low short song. This species has been reared in England, but not in cages. Their food is small seeds, in addition to millet and insects. Sleeping nests are a necessity to these little birds.

The Firefinch has the reputation of great delicacy, which is a mistaken one; but they are large eaters for their size. They require exercise, which in a cage they seldom get. Some birds do not go out of colour; probably after a certain age the colour is permanent. The change of colour comes with a complete moult, the red feathers coming under the brown ones, the brown feathers growing long and finally dropping out. The moult comes in autumn, as in these birds' native countries the hottest weather is during our English winter-time. They are found all over Africa, but imported from Senegal, and hence called Senegal Firefinches.

OTHER SPECIES.

Next in size to Lagonosticta brunneiceps, but rarely imported into England, is the Vinaceous Firefinch, Lagonosticta vinacea, more of a Finch than a Waxbill.

The head is black and velvety, the body a curious dull, pinkish mauve, a most distinct colour, not likely to be confused with any other Firefinch's. The legs and feet are dark.

The larger Firefinches are most difficult to distinguish, but are all larger than the three I have described. They seem to form a section to themselves. Lagonosticta larvata, the Masked Firefinch, with black legs and feet. Lagonosticta polionota, whose back and wings are dark grey-brown. Lagonosticta congica is a faint-coloured bird, resembling Lagonosticta larvata. Lagonosticta rhodoparia resembles Lagonosticta polionota. Lagonosticta rufopicta, the Ruddy Firefinch, has a red breast with flat white spots, the back and other parts dark grey-brown. It is known also as the Bar-breasted Firefinch, as the scarlet crosses the breast in a broad band.

Lagonosticta rubricata is larger than the last, dark grey-brown, with rose-coloured breast and very large white spots. The female is brown, with rose under the chin. She reminds me of a young Robin.

Lagonosticta niveiguttata, or Peters' Spotted Finch, is the handsomest of all, a splendid bird, with a scarlet head and throat, and the white spots large and distinct. It is as large as a Weaver, and has no resemblance to Lagonosticta brunneiceps.

Lastly, we have the grey Lagonostictas, Lagonosticta cerulescens, known as the Lavender Finch, and the rarer Black-tailed Lavender Finch, Lagonosticta incana.

FAIR PLAY FOR FOREIGN FINCHLETS.

If our common hardy English birds were exported across the seas, given indigestible food, and kept in small cages, they, too, would earn the reputation of being delicate and difficult to keep alive. I am quite sure that once the Firefinches recover the voyage and are properly fed and housed they will live and thrive and make charming pets, for they are sociable, fearless little birds, full of life and energy.

Wild Plants for Cage Birds.

Weeds and Seeds of the Field and Wayside described.

By R. MORSE.

With Footnotes, etc., by G. E. Weston.

Broad-leaved Dock (Robtusi-Foline).

Another common and useful species of dock is the one popularly known as the Broad-leaved Dock. This is somewhat taller and stouter than the Curled Dock, but it is almost equally plentiful.

As is indicated by the name, the Broad-leaved Dock has much larger and broader leaves than the other species. The flowers differ also, being in distinct whorls instead of crowded. Its flowering season does not last quite so long as that of the Curled Dock, but seeds may generally be gathered in abundance during August and September, and often a month or so later in certain seasons.

Docks were highly valued by our forefathers, by whom they were largely used as medicine. It was claimed that "Dock decoction" was a splendid remedy for diseases of the liver, and that it had a very beneficial effect on impure blood.

An old writer says:—"Blood-wort [a name sometimes given to docks on account of the reddish tinge of some species] is exceedingly strengthening to the liver, and procures good blood, being as wholesome a potherb as any that grows in a garden; yet such is the nicety of our times (forsooth) that women will not put it into a pot, because it makes the pottage black; pride and ignorance, a couple of monsters in the creation, preferring nicety before health."

The docks are favourite plants with quite a number of seed-loving wild birds. Bullfinches are very keen on dock seed, and at this time of the year feed largely upon it. By the river side (where a species of dock grows to a very large size) I have this last few weeks noted many nice little lots of young and adult Bullies busily devouring the myriad seeds of this plant. The extent of their onslaught was plain for all to see. Fanciers should take the "tip." Dock is very plentiful and easily gathered. Aviarists in particular will find it a cheap food; when fully ripe, few birds seem able to resist a fill of dock. This seed is also very easily stored, when gathered fully ripe, for late autumn and winter use.—G.E.W.

Groundsel (Senecio vulgaris).

Of all the wild plants useful for cage-birds, this is perhaps the best known and most commonly used species. The small compound flowers are of a yellow colour, and are followed by a pappus similar to—but much smaller than—that of thistles and dandelions. This pappus is a beautiful provision of Nature, and enables the wind to carry the reproductive seed oft-times to very great distances, and also into very strange positions. Groundsel may therefore frequently be found growing on old walls, roofs of houses, out-buildings, etc., the wind, by the aid of the pappus, having blown the seeds to these places.

Not only the seeds of this plant, but also the leaves and tender young shoots are exceedingly useful for cage-birds. A decoction known as "Groundsel Decoction," was formerly largely used by country-folk as a remedy for diseases of the liver and kidneys.

NO RATS SEEN since using Danysz Virus six months ago; see testimonials; Single tubes, 2s. 6d.; three tubes, 5s. Post free from DANYSZ VIRUS, Ltd., Box 74, 52, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C. Harmless to other animals. No inconvenience from dead rats.

Black Knapweed (R. obtusifolius).

This is another common plant; known in many parts of the country as "Hard Heads." It has tough stems, from one to two feet in height, and terminal flower-heads of a deep crimson, or rather purplish colour, much resembling the smaller flowers of the thistle. It may easily be distinguished from the latter, however, by the leaves, which are quite destitute of prickles. The lower leaves are somewhat toothed, but the upper are much smaller, and are narrow and tapering.

The seed-heads do not develop such a conspicuous mass of "pappus" as do the thistles and dandelion (which belong to the same Natural Order), but by breaking them open large quantities of seeds may usually be found. The "bracts" at the base of each flower-head are usually of a very dark brown, or nearly black colour, hence the specific and popular names.

Black Knapweed (or Hardheads).

A. Upper Leaf. B. Flowering Head. C. Lower Leaf. Shape and size of leaves vary greatly.

The Black Knapweed grows abundantly in most meadows, and may be found in bloom from June till September, or even later, and at the present time large quantities of seeds may easily be gathered and stored for future use.

Great Knapweed (Centaurea scabiosa).

This is another species of Knapweed, and is, like Centaurea nigra, sometimes called "Hard Heads," but its more common name is, perhaps, "Matfellon." It can easily be distinguished from the other species if the following points are studied. In the first place the leaves differ entirely; they are considerably larger, and are very much cut-up, making the leaf what is botanically known as "pinnatifid" (from the Latin pinna—a feather).

The whole plant is, moreover, a great deal larger and stouter than the Black Knapweed. The flower-heads also are fully double the size, and are much more handsome; in colour they are very similar, but of a brighter crimson. The pappus is somewhat longer than in the former variety.

The Great Knapweed is not so plentiful as the other, but still is quite common in dry meadows and waste places from July to September.

Wild Teazle (Dipsacus sylvestris).

There are at least two species of Teazle which occur wild in England, but only one is really common, and this is popularly known as the Wild Teazle, or Common Teazle (Dipsacus sylvestris). It is a tall, stout plant, sometimes reaching a height of six or even seven feet, and having an upright, prickly stem.

The leaves are large, and of a bright green colour, with prickles underneath. They are placed opposite each other on the stems of the plant, and are generally (especially towards the base of the plant) united, so that a sort of cup is formed, which is often found full of water. It is interesting to note that this water is intended to stop creeping insects from climbing the stem of the teazle, and stealing the honey (or rather "nectar") from the flowers. Such insects may often be found drowned in the water. The nectar is really intended for flying insects, which confer upon the plant the benefit of "cross-fertilisation"—this being necessary for the formation of a good stock of seeds.

Seeding Head of Teazle.

The flower-heads are large, and conical in shape, and covered with straight bristles. These heads are often gathered by town visitors to the country, and when "crystallised" form very pretty room-decorations. The flowers are of a charming lilac colour, and may be seen from July to September. Abundance of seeds may therefore be gathered at the present time.

The wild Teazle is a biennial plant, and is quite common in waste places, and by riversides throughout most of the country. The seeds form a most useful food for various Finches, etc. The plant was once used medicinally by mankind.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Doings of the Swallows—Late Broods.

Four young swallows are sitting in the rain-water gutter, they have just left the nest in the wool loft. Three of the birds are close together, the remaining one is perched quite a yard away. An old bird rushes up, feeds one of the three, and is gone again before one hardly realises that she has been. In a few seconds the visit is repeated either by the same bird or her partner, this time another one of the young ones receives the supply of food, and so it continues at irregular intervals, the three young ones crowded together receiving all the attention.

The young bird along the gutter, away from the rest, is apparently neglected by the parent bird; he twitters and trembles, and is evidently getting hungry. At last he moves and flutters along the eaves to join his brothers and sisters, but these do not welcome him as they should; he tries to get to the front, and they try just as hard to keep him back. Numbers are against him, and he consequently subsides into the background apparently under the eaves, so low in the gutter that one is unable to see him from below, the three white bodies with the dark crescents are all that is visible. One of the three again receives the attentions of the old bird, but she has evidently noticed the return of the wanderer, for at her next visit she comes between them and feeds the youngster in the background. To do this she has to single him out specially, and to reach over the heads of the others to get at him. One has to consider if there is any real reason why this young one was allowed to remain hungry while away from the others.

The old birds evidently knew he was there, for they constantly flew by almost touching him. It looks as though he is expected to remain with his companions, or to be punished for not doing so.

Although these young swallows are out of the nest they have not quite thrown off the habits of the nursery; they reach over the edge of the gutter to void their excrement. How long do such habits continue in the young bird? It is evidently part of their nature to do so during their nesting existence, regardless of place or position, for they will not remain long enough in the gutter to consider it in any way as a nest.

A Libel on the Whitethroat.

Our beautiful wild birds often get the credit of for doing damage for which they are perfectly innocent. A cutting from a West Country paper says "the Jay, the Hawfinch, and the Whitethroat—all are great devourers of peas, and all are down on the gardener's black list." It is to be hoped that gardeners are more observant than the writer of this passage. Who ever heard of the Whitethroat doing damage to growing peas? He is a harmless little bird, living almost exclusively upon insects during the summer. If the writer saw him among the pea sticks, he can rest assured that the bird was there for the caterpillars and green flies, the sweetest peas ever grown would never tempt this graceful little songster. With the Jay and the Hawfinch it is quite another matter; they are passionately fond of them, and will do considerable damage to a row of these vegetables in a very short time.

Young Swallows.

Although the time for migration is at h... young birds are still to be seen in the nest. There are three broods of Swallows under one roof in the village, the oldest of them will soon be taking wing. If one goes gently so that a good view of the nest can be obtained, the whole brood will be seen perching upon the rim of the structure, all facing outwards. One could not wish for a prettier sight, the four white bodies attract the eye first, then the four semi-circular throat markings, and lastly the dark head with the yellow beaks, but they do not remain long in this position, some subtle instinct tells them it is dangerous, and as soon as they see they are observed, they instantly crouch down in the nest. In a day or two they will be out, and perched in a row upon one of the crossbeams of the old building. They do not attempt to fly until they are practically fully fledged and able to sustain themselves for some time in the air.

Where Wild Birds Flourish.

While looking at some photographs of rocks covered with sea-fowl, I could not but notice how closely the birds stood to each other. How is it these sea-fowl, which do not commence to breed until they are at least two years old (and then in many cases only rear a single chick), can manage to increase to this extent? In the case of inland birds, although many of them are rapidly increasing (take the Rook or Sparrow as instances), yet there is still plenty of room for the former among the elm trees, and our common Sparrows are not so numerous but what they will rear three or four broods next season, and still find room for them. Possibly the mortality among the inland birds is greater than is that of the sea-fowl.

STONEGATE WIREWORKS, YORK.

THE ONLY ART

in bird catching is to get proper appliances to work with. Given these, and it is just as simple as it looks. Every appliance sold by me is guaranteed to be made by men who are not only practical makers, but experienced bird catchers as well, and neither time nor money is spared to make them the most up-to-date, reliable, and durable on the market. To prove this to your own satisfaction, I only ask you to have anything I sell on approval and compare it with a similar thing from any other advertiser, and if mine is not far better value at a less price, return it to me, and tell your friends that my articles are useless. For months and months last season I publicly asked any dissatisfied purchaser to smash up anything he had had from me, and I would return him the whole of his money, but not one article was smashed up, nor was I ever asked to refund a penny. This fact alone speaks volumes for the quality of my goods. Clap nets made from genuine ½inch mesh thread, 3 yards long, 4/- pair, 4 yards 5/-, 5 yards 6/-, 6 yards 7/-, 7 yards 8/-, 8 yards 9/-, 9 yards 10/-, 10 yards 11/- pair, all fly 4 feet, and are actually 5 feet deep, in order to allow plenty of "kill." All clap nets have two nets to the pair, and are properly geared all round and fitted complete with pure hemp lines, beech pegs, bireb stave poles, and everything ready for immediate work. Any size clap net made to order. Sparrow nets fitted on 19 feet poles, 6/6 pair. Spring net traps, 24 inches long, 1/- each, 18 inches long, 9d. each. These net traps are by far the largest on the market, are entirely self-acting, will catch and hold uninjured, any bird from a Wren to a Rook, and are so simple, a child can set them. Single trap cages 6d. each, six 2/6, twelve 4/6; double ditto, 10d. and 1/- each, 7/6 and 8/6 dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each, 11/- dozen. Patent self-setting and self-acting trap cages, work automatically, 1/6 each; round or square topped call cages, 3d. each, 2/6 dozen; loose netting, genuine thread, ½inch mesh, 7 feet deep, 3d. yard, 9 feet deep, 4d. yard, 12 feet deep, 5d. yard, all post free. This netting is exceedingly fine, but very strong, made specially for bird netting, and must not be confused with the thick American cotton netting being sold as bird netting. Real Japanese bird lime, absolutely the strongest made, and only lime to stand all weathers, guaranteed to hold a Rook or Hawk, ½lb. 6d., ½lb. 10d., 1lb. 1/6; sample box 3d., all post free. Pure hemp pull lines, 64 yards long, 1/4 each, post free. Full list of all catchers' appliances and sample of netting one, stamp. Goldfinch or Linnet cages, 4/6, 5/- and 5/6 dozen; Lark cages 3/6, 4/-, 4/6 and 6/6 dozen; Redpoll cages, 2/6 dozen. All wire Canary cages 3/6 and 4/6 each. All brass drawing-room cages with ruby glass, 5/-, 6/-, 6/6, 7/6 and 10/- each. Parrot cages from 4/- to 20/- each. Every description of cage in stock. Dealers please send stamp for full printed list. Following few testimonials go to show value sent out. "7, Winbolt-st., Stockport, Sept. 6th.—Sir,—The netting I got from you some months' ago is best I ever used, please repeat the order, viz: 36 yards of 12 feet for clap nets, Yours, A. Pennor" "Near Elm Tree, Blisworth, Sept. 10th.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. lime, it is best I ever used, Yours, J. Harris." "Greenhill Gunislake.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. bird lime, which I find out is better than I can get off anyone else, Yours, W. Phillips." "6, Berkeley Terace, Southall.—Sir,—Please send following netting. I can say that the netting I had from you far excelled all my imaginations, being far superior to that of Messrs. . . ., Yours, J. Crockford." "Claremont Place, Larkhall.—Sir,—Please send another pound of bird lime. I never lost a bird with the last pound I had from you, it is real good stuff, Yours, G. Alexander." "Harrow, Middlesex.—Sir,—Thanks for netting to hand, which is very satisfactory. I shall bear you in mind in future, Yours, C. Steeles." Remember everything sent on aproval, cash or deposit system, and money refunded in full if every satisfaction not given. By dealing with me you not only save money, but you get appliances with which you can catch birds, not frighten them away. See British Bird Column.

XXX BIRD LIME,

Best ever used; thousands of testimonials received; few latest here given—2d. and 4d., box free,

For the very best made Nets. Cages, &c., see my Illustrated Catchers' List, One Stamp.

Alhion Hill House, Ramsgate, Sept. 1, 1907.—Many thanks for the trap and aviary; I am simply delighted with it. I never imagined anything half so spacious.—O. Halstead to W. Rudd.

Bewsbaugh, Kielder, Northumberland, Aug. 27, 1907. I received trap, cage and flute safely; both give satisfaction. Thanks for prompt despatch.—W. Hedley to W. Rudd.

High Hill, New Ross, Aug. 27, 1907.—Please send a box of birdlime; your birdlime is very good, and I am getting all the boys to send to you for it.—T. Cushen to W. Rudd.

Piggot Yard, Norby, Thirsk, Aug. 27, 1907.—Please send ½lb. of birdlime; I found it very good last season, and I want to start with it this time.—J. E. Lofthouse to W. Rudd.

Corhubber, Ballymote, Co. Sligo, Sept. 5, 1907.—Please send a box of birdlime; I hear it is very good. I got some from several places, but it was no good. I am an old trapper, so know what a bit of good lime is; a friend of mine told me yours was very good.—S. Grey to W. Rudd.

St. Paul's Rectory, Chippenham, Sept. 4, 1907.—Thank you for Patent Cage; I like it very much. Please send another.—Rev. J. F. Griffiths to W. Rudd.

37, Ring Street, Bridlington, Sept. 10, 1907.—Cage arrived safely. I am highly satisfied with it.—J. Woodcock to W. Rudd.

Gwynfa, Penypyllan, near Holywell, Sept. 11, 1907.—Will you please forward ½lb. of your birdlime. The sample I got from you was very good.—R. J. Hughes to W. Rudd.

7, Jubilee Road, Basingstoke, Sept. 7, 1907.—Kindly send two bottles of tonic, as I find it has done my bird a great deal of good.—Mrs. S. J. Tarrant to W. Rudd.

Soham House, Newmarket, Sept. 11, 1907.—Lady Edith Douglas Penant writes to tell Mr. Rudd that she is very pleased with the cage and much obliged for the trouble taken over it.

High Coley, Wolseley Bridge, near Stafford, Sept. 2, 1907.—Please forward a box of your bird lime, same as last.—A. Reay to W. Rudd.

New Lodge Cty, Lillcshall, Newport, Sept. 10, 1907.—Will you please send a box of birdlime. The last I had was very good, and I can't get any elsewhere like it.—J. William to W. Rudd.

5, Mechanic Street, New Spildon, Durham, Sept. 10, 1907.—Will you send a box of Birdlime. It is the best I have had for a long time.—J. Carn to W. Rudd.

MY SELF-ACTING SPRING NET TRAPS.

Catch birds of every description without any attention, price 1/6; larger size 2/-, carriage paid. I have received hundreds of testimonials stating they are worth double the money of any trap advertised. Read two, and beware of cheaper imitations that are not worth the cost of carriage. Sir,—Received the trap; it is honestly worth a dozen of some of the nets advertised. I tried it this afternoon and caught more birds in two hours than I caught in other traps in two months.—George Matthews, 2, Lucas Street, Stockport. Sir,—Trap arrived safe. It is far superior to all others. I have to-day caught fifteen Linnets, six Redpolls, four Chaffinches, three Greenfinches.—" Joseph Scragg, "The Old Brewery," Armitage Road, Rugeley. Trap cages, single 6d., double 1/-, treble 1/3, entirely self-acting and self-setting trap cage, warranted to catch birds and reset without any attention, 1/6; call cages, 4d.; holly bark birdlime, strongest in England, in air-tight tins, 1/6 lb.; 9d. ½ lb., 5d. ¼ lb. Test it with a sample tin, 3d. post free; clap nets, made from the strongest and finest thread obtainable, 4yds. 5/-, 5 yards 6/-, 6 yards 7/-, 7 yards 8/-, 8 yards 9/-, 9 yards 10/-, 10 yards 11/-, all 5 feet deep; also 8 yards 11/6, 9 yards 13/-, 10 yards 15/-, all 6 feet deep; pegs, poles and pull lines sent complete. Drag nets, 1½ inch mesh, 20 yards long, 9 feet deep, 12/-; 25 yards, 15/-; fine netting ¾ mesh, 7 feet deep, 3d.; 10 feet 4d. per yard post free (send for sample). Dealers send for stamp for wholesale list of cages.—Henry Morris, Capo Hill, Birmingham.

BIRD CATCHERS

Are you requiring any appliances. The Old Firm still busy; surely you can trust us with your orders—we have catered for all the leading catchers years before other dealers thought of nets; we are manufacturers of high-class goods only, made to work, not merely to sell; we invent new ideas, others copy. We send out everything and return money if not entirely satisfied, or you can deposit amount with Editor. Every article is sent out in thoroughly working order; all nets are set in field and worked by those who understand them, before despatching. Enormous stock. No waiting.

ON APPROVAL.

Birdcatching Appliances

HARRY ALLEN,

CHAMPION of all Champions. Patronised by all the leading contest singers and exhibitors. Come and hear the proudest and cleanest quality singing Linnet in the world. Everybody heartily welcome. I have the finest lot of Linnets ever seen or heard; all from the same place, as the above champion. Big, fine cock Linnets, well pencilled, sure winners, 1/- each; extra picked birds, real beauties, 1/6 each; no rubbish, and in the best of health. I have a grand lot of young cocks being learnt by my champion; with singing cage, a packet of my special mixture, and instructions how to feed, 3/- the lot; real bargain. I defy any dealer to supply the same for the money. They are constantly pouring out some of my champion's wonderful notes. House-moulted Linnets just through the moult, singing hard, with their wings down and ready for contests, 10/6 and 15/- each. I have a few acknowledged prize winners, £1 each; will sing at any living bird. Also the proudest Goldfinch in Leeds, twice house-moulted; splendid blaze bars, buttons, etc., bred Mules this year; real bargain, 10/6 with grand cage, 12/-; he is singing all day long, and is an experienced call bird. Four packets of my special mixture, 1/-; all contest singers should try this. If you want your birds to sing at one another with their wings down, send P.O. 1/6 for my book of secrets. I have my birds singing at empty cages with this method daylight or gaslight. "Castle-street, Omagh, Ireland. Sir, please send two cock Linnets; enclose P.O. Pleased to tell you the birds I got from you last year are splendid birds.—J. Cadden to H. Allen." Hundreds of testimonials to show. All my birds are on seven days' approval; cash or deposit; satisfaction guaranteed. This is the original Linnet firm. Beware of imitations. Thanking you all for patronage.—Harry Allen, 42, Brown Hill-crescent, Harehills, Leeds.

A CHANCE OF A LIFETIME.

Owing to leaving the district I am compelled to give up the fancy, and must clear the whole of my stock, including four dozen stock cages, all made of best bright pine, with baths at side. About 3½ dozen show cages, suitable for every description of bird from a Wren to a Hoopoe, made of best pine to my own order. These will last a lifetime, and will be sold regardless of cost. The whole of my grand stock of well-known winners, including: Hoopoe, Golden Oriel, Great Grey Shrike, Blackbirds, Thrushes, Swallows, House Martins, Red-backed Shrikes, Wrynecks, Willow Wrens, Shore Lark, Nightingales, Redstarts, Wheatears, Pipits, grey Wagtails, white Wagtails, Meadow Buntings, Hawfinch, Snow Buntings, Siskin, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, etc., etc., etc., are for immediate sale. The whole of this stock has been most carefully colour-fed, and is nearly through the moult, some of the finest specimens living of their respective species. Price list on receipt of stamped addressed envelope. Don't miss this opportunity, or you will regret it.

THE GREAT POINT

about my method of dealing is that I don't merely ask you to take my word. I want you to see my birds and satisfy yourself that you are getting exactly what you want, and for this reason I send all on approval, entirely at my own risk, either cash or "Cage Birds" deposit system, and despite the many assertions to the contrary, I claim to be the originator of approval system in connection with wild birds. Splendid large Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and condition, 1/6 each, three 4/-; six, 6/6; twelve 12/-; specially selected large birds for exhibition or muling and warranted in song, 2/- each; three 5/-; six, 8/6; twelve, 16/-; few clean moulted cocks in full colour and superb condition, 3/- each; hen Goldfinches, 1/- each, three 2/6; grand large red-breasted cock Linnets in pink of health, 9d. each; three, 1/6; six, 2/6; twelve, 4/-; few specially selected cocks for show in song, 1/- each; three, 2/6; six, 4/-. Please note every Linnet sent out is guaranteed red-breasted, thus proving that you get all cocks for your money; these Linnets are same sort as supplied by me to contest singers throughout England, so why not buy first-handed and save extortionate profits:—Cock Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/-; six, 1/6; specially selected yellow cocks for show, 1/- each; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; Redpolls, three 1/3; six 2/-; grand cock Skylarks, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; cock Bullfinches, 1/6 and 2/- each; hen Bullfinches, 1/- each; two year old cock Linnet Mule, 7/0; two year old Siskin Mule, 7/6; young cock Linnet Mules 5/- each; see following few testimonials:—"Park House, The Green, Ealing, Sept. 6th.—Miss Gilpin received Linnet quite safe, and is well pleased with it." "22, Smith's Terrace, Mitcham, Sept. 14.—Sir,—Goldfinches arrived quite safe and am well pleased with them, and will send other orders shortly.—Yours, F. Tulty." "282, Portland Avenue, Langwith.—Sir,—Please send me a Goldfinch; a friend of mine told me what good birds you always send out.—Yours, J. Cutts." "22, Wilne Street, Leicester. — Sir,—Please send me selected Goldfinch. I had one from you earlier in the year, and was very pleased indeed with it.—Yours, W. Riley." "151, Penyrheolgerrig, Merthyr Tydvil.—Sir,—Please send the following. I have bought birds from you before, and always found them as advertised. — Yours, Howell Williams." "Simpson, near Bletchley.—Sir,—Please send the following. The Goldfinch I had last year turned out well.—Yours, E. Hollier." "50, Gossage Street, Widnes.—Sir,—The two Larks arrived safe, and give every satisfaction.—Yours, T. Oldfield." Hundreds of similar testimonials open to inspection any time. Please note all birds are guaranteed properly netted in County of Worcester, and are not lime caught Irish birds palmed off as Worcestershire caught birds. One trial will convince the most sceptical that my birds are exactly as represented. For cages, etc., see appliance column.

Cape Town. August 13th, 1907.

You sent some Canaries to —— She exhibited at —— winning many prizes, amongst them 1st nd Special, with a ticked Yorkshire hen; the bird was claimed.—M. L. N. to W. Rudd.

[This one bird then, I find, made 200 % (two hundred per cent.) more than I charged.]—W. RUDD.

Ontario, Canada.

August 30th, 1907.

It is with pleasure I notify you arrival of birds. I feel it my duty to congratulate you on your excellent method of urgent despatch and packing, and your honourable dealings. As regards provisions, there seemed to be nothing lacking, as on arrival they had written instructions "to the man in charge." Oceans of seed, a bottle of tonic, a bottle of asthmarine, a tin of eggertine; in fact, all that was necessary in case of sickness. They also appeared to have been well cared for, if not it would not have been the fault of the sender.—T. C. to W. Rudd.

Oudtshoorn, Cape Colony.

August 26th, 1907.

Just a few lines to say I have received crests, crested breds and Norwich birds, which I am only too pleased to say have come in good condition. The Yorkshires, I am also pleased to tell you, have also come in the same good condition; I must say that they have been well looked after by your shipping agents.—M. A. to W. Rudd.

Quebec, Canada.

July 19th, 1907.

The Canaries arrived at Quebec per ss. "Hibernia." They are fine and vigorous; I am very pleased with them. My friends are enebanted with them.—V. E. L. to W. Rudd.

Dordogne, France.

September 14, 1907.

Satisfied with your last consignment of Border Fancies, I now want . . . I have always confidence in you, and will send money directly, without deposit system.—Baron du —— to W. Rudd.

It will be quite obvious to all readers the reason why full addresses are omitted, but, as above stated, they can be seen.—W. RUDD.

"ASTHMARINE"

IT SAVES WHERE OTHERS FAIL.

The greatest remedy ever brought before the Fancy, and has the largest Sale of any similar article by far. Beware of imitations! For all lung affections it is marvellously efficacious — not a liver burner, but both soothing and healing. Thousands of testimonials received for this article alone. 9d. and 2s. 6d. per bottle, post free. Once used, always kept ready for any sudden attack.

"EGGERTINE"

It is the best, purest and greatest bone and muscle forming food ever known, as the analytical reports of most eminent authorities prove. It will bring hens into sound and robust condition for breeding as nothing else will. This during the past twenty years has been proved by thousands. It is a genuine egg food made with fresh laid English eggs, with white, of course, included (and NOT foreign preserved yolk of egg) with other valuable properties combined. Tins, post free, 1s. 3d.; large size, 2s. 6d. There is a saving in the larger size.

75, Manchester Old Road, Middleton, Sept. 11, 1907. Please send one bottle of Asthmarine at once. I have always found it work wonders with my birds, but I have just run out of it.—S. Heywood to W. Rudd.

Cannot do without it.

Summerlea Row, by Hamilton, Sept. 15, 1907.—Please send by return two bottles of Asthmarine, as I cannot do without it. I have lost a good Norwich owing to me having run out of it.—J. McGhie to W. Rudd.

VAYNOL PARK (N.W.)

A most successful show was held on September 14th at Vaynol Park, North Wales. A lovely Buff, the property of Mr. Rowlands, won in the Norwich class, a very promising youngster. Yorkshires were strongly represented. Mr. Tom Cowell's young Cinnamon deserves high praise. Both these birds were bred 1907. The staging and arrangements were superintended with great ability by the worthy secretary, Mr. George Outram. Mr. J. Kershaw judged. NOR CLEAR (9): 1, 2, Hyde special, res., Rowlands, leader, buff, short and chubby, good bold front, neat head and neck; 2, yellow, grand size, shape, and quality of feather close on his brother's heels takes Hyde special; 3, R. R. Williams, another yellow, in good condition, well worthy of its place; vhc, Thomas; he, Jones and Rowlands. TICKED, etc. (7): 1, E. J. Jones, capital marked buff, wonderful for size, not quite over moult yet, will improve; 2 and 3, Williams, large variegated buff, in the best of condition, we liked much; 3, yellow variegated, not quite so chubbily built as winners, but will improve; res, Hughes; vhc, Cowell. YORKS. CLEAR (21): 1, Rowlands, clear yellow rich colour, close feather, stylish, an easy win, quickly claimed; 2 and res, H. Williams, buff, good quality, plenty of length, very stylish, shade strong in build; 3, W. and R. Jones, buff, better colour, a close race, not much to choose between them; vhc, and he, R. W. Roberts. TICKED (16): 1, Tom Cowell, cinnamon marked, very shapely, straight as a dart, will be hard to beat; 2 and 3, W. H. Jones, both cinnamons, third not quite over moult yet, second of nice quality; vhc, R. E. Griffiths (2), Jones (2), H. C. Williams. A.O.V. (8): 1, E. J. Jones, variegated C. bred, plenty of size, head feather fairly long and dense; 2, Rowlands, good green crest, not in the best of condition; 3, R. E. Griffiths, Scotch fancy, gets tail well under perch; res, W. C. Roberts; vhc, Butler. MULE (14): 1, H. S. Davies, very nice Linnet-Bullie, takes special best bird in show; 2, G. Evans, variegated Goldie, showing parentage distinctly, in grand condition; 3, Williams; extra 3, E. J. Jones, two dark Mules of good size, worthy of their place; res, Owen; vhc, Gray; hc, Butler. GOLDFINCH (4): 1, Price Owen; 2, Edwards; 3, Owen, our choice for first, but all in bad plumage A.O.V. BRIT. (10): 1, H. S. Davis, Thrush in grand bloom, beautiful colour, well spotted; 2, E. F. Jones, Missel Thrush, bad wing carriage, otherwise good all over; 3, Namey; vhc, R. W. Roberts, Hughes. SELLING: 1 and 2, R. R. Williams, Buff Norwich, justly claimed, 2 crest; 3, H. S. Davis; res, Cowell; vhc, Rowlands.

Mr. Harding Williams, Chemical Road, Morriston, has been elected C.B.U. representative for the Morriston and Dis. C.B.S. There is every prospect of a most successful show at Morriston on Nov. 21st., we having secured the Drill Hall, an ideal place to hold a cage bird show, plenty of overhead light and free from draught. All prize money guaranteed, no cancelling, or amalgamation. I hope exhibitors will bear in mind that, although it is our first show, the majority of our members are old fanciers who are well able to give every attention and care to the exhibits.—W. JEREMY, sec. Morriston and Dis. C.B.S.

The Yorkshire Canary Club.

From Messrs. J. Greaves and S. Dean, the Yorkshire Canary Club hon. secs., we have received the yearly handbook of the club, and a most interesting pamphlet it is. It gives a full list of the officers and committee, the rules and byelaws, scale of points, space for memoranda, a nomination form for next year's election (an excellent idea this), most important matter relating to the club's trophies and various competitions, and a full list of members. From it we gather that the list of specials for competitions in 1907-8 are:—Yorkshire Challenge Cup, £21; Mr. J. W. Ramsden's Challenge Cup, £6 6s.; Mr. T. Sandiford's Challenge Cup, £5 5s.; Mr. J. By H. W. BATTYE (President of the Yorkshire Union). Illustrated by Messrs. H. Norman and A. J. Simpson.

Price 1/- nett. Post Free 1/1½.

This book is absolutely the very best that has been put on the market. It deals fully with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties, and should, without doubt be in the hands of every breeder of the bird of Grace and Beauty. It contains instruction upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, Exhibiting and how to treat this popular variety in both health and disease.

Mr. J. B. Waterman writes:—

"I am delighted with Mr. Battye's book entitled 'Yorkshire Canaries,' and while it would be like trying to gild refined gold or painting the lily, to speak in terms of praise of the great ability of this enthusiastic lover of the bird of 'Grace and Beauty,' I must say the work will prove a very valuable addition to every bird lover's library. I found it not only intensely interesting, but full of good, sound, useful information, expressed with a clearness not often found in works of this description; and in my opinion it will very materially assist the young beginner to achieve the highest fame in the Fancy. The chapter on 'Don'ts' is itself worth the money, coming as it does from a fancier of such a wide and varied experience with the Yorkshire bird as Mr. Battye."

Sept. 25—Deal—Messrs. M. N. Avis and W. H. Thompson, 56, Gilford Road.
Sept. 28—St. Andrews.—T. Auchterlonie, 7, Park Street.

At a meeting held September 10th, it was decided that the West Bromwich and Dis. C.B.S. should hold their first annual open show on November 26th. It was also mentioned that any of the members having friends, not fanciers, either ladies or gentlemen, may bring them to any general meeting.—T. DUFFIELD, hon. sec.

An Interesting Notion.

In connection with their forthcoming annual show, we hear that the members of the Coventry C.B.S purpose holding a drawing competition for boys attending the local elementary schools. The subjects for their pencils will be various British birds, and our Mr. G. E. Weston has been invited to judge the juvenile efforts.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION.

The following Shows are held under Cage Bird Union Rules and may be supported by members of the Union.

Members are warned that they are prohibited from exhibiting at any show not appearing in this list, and which has not the Union's Rules published in the Schedules:—

GEO. W. F. LETHGOE, 25, Stamford Street, Old Trafford, Manchester.

TWITTERINGS.

Mr. A. Wellings will judge Sale show on November 9th.

Mr. J. Wilcock has been appointed to judge at Hanley on November 21st.

Inverness O.A. are holding their next monthly meeting on September 25th.

Bideford Show we hear will most likely be held under C.B.U. rules this year.

Mr. J. C. Barnes we hear has done exceedingly well this last breeding season.

Dunbar Show will be held on November 27th so we are informed by Mr. Secretary McIntosh.

Mr. Fred. F. Hawkins has removed to 140, Saltwell Road, Gateshead. Secretaries to please note.

I have removed to 22, Manchester Road, Hyde.—HARRY FODEN, Ashton-under-Lyne and District O.S.

Gloucester Fanciers' Show will be held on November 20th and 21st, open to the county of Gloucestershire.

Great Harwood Show will be under Cinnamon Club patronage. There will be two foreign classes at this fixture.

Kindly note our show is under C.B.U. rules, and our second judge will be Mr. H. Knight, of Bayswater.—W. H. COLMAN, Wimbledon and Dis. C.B.S.

Mr. J. W. Morgan has removed from Staffs. to Worcester, and will be pleased if secretaries and others will note his new address, 7, Tallow Hill, Worcester.

C.B. Annual Part II. is just what show secretaries require, containing as it does all the names and addresses of the leading exhibitors in every section.

Thanks to advertising in CAGE BIRDS, I have sold all my stock of "Lifebelt," and shall have no more for sale till next breeding season.—W. GARTHWAITE, Hare Street, Grimsby.

Messrs. J. W. Bruce, Coldstream: A. J. Gladwin, Nottingham; and C. Sneddon, Kirkham; will judge our open show on the 30th November.—J. C. BURNIE, sec., Castle Douglas F.A.

We are pleased to be able to chronicle the recovery to health of Mr. A. W. Curtis, the well-known London lover of a good Plainhead, who for some considerable time past has been unfortunately laid up with severe illness.

Owing to the resignation of Mr. Stephenson, Mr. A. Wilkins, The Gardens, Oakhurst, Moortown, Leeds, has been elected secretary to the L.C.B.S., and to him all correspondence should be addressed.—WILKINS and HORNBY, secs.

On all hands we hear that Mr. Battye's book on Yorkshire Canaries is greatly approved of. It is without doubt a masterpiece of practical exposition; no work on any variety of Canary has attained such a popularity as this book is making a bid for.

Mr. Miller, the secretary of Rochester Show, asks us to state that a class has been left out of their schedule. Exhibitors should note that "Class 93a, Norwich Ticked, marked, or variegated, colour fed, cock or hen," has been missed, and should enter accordingly.

Owing to the demands of increasing business, Mr. J. F. Dewar has secured additional workshop accommodation at No. 1, St. Patrick Square, Edinburgh, and having added to his plant the newest and most improved machinery, is in a position to do a much larger business in wire work and cage making.

British bird lovers in the neighbourhood of Pendleton and Salford should not overlook the lecture on their pets by that old fancier, Mr. Barker Clegg, on Monday next, September 23rd, at the Chapel-street Mission Hall, under the auspices of the Pendleton and Salford O.S.

Bird-lovers in the Wibsey district who have a liking for that toothsome dainty, meat-pie, should not overlook the supper and concert of the Wibsey C.B.S., at the "Horse and Groom," on September 21st.

The Darlington Society's membership radius is now open, writes the Secretary Mr. R. S. BLACK (42, Brook Terrace), and we are prepared to enroll any fanciers desirous of joining.

We have secured the Assembly Room Market Hall, a splendid large room, well lighted both day and night, properly heated and quite free from draughts. Our classification is good especially so for British, for which we are providing extended classification. The Hall is in the centre of the town, and about five minutes' walk from the Mid. and G.C. Stations. I trust exhibitors will rally round us, and so insure success.—E. D. GLADWIN, chairman, Chesterfield C.B.S.

A Yorkshireman on Yorkshires.

Successful Bradfordian Gives Away His Secrets.

By J. HARTLEY.

It gave me great pleasure indeed to see my bird appear in a recent CAGE BIRDS. It is a splendid likeness, true to life in every detail. I thank you very much for publishing it. You ask me to let you have a few notes about the bird, as to what she has won, etc., also a few notes on how I treat my stock of Yorkshires. The bird you portrayed I bred myself, and I have exhibited her with great success. It is a Cinnamon Marked Buff Hen. She is inbred (I am a great believer in inbreeding), and she has taken the following prizes:—6 firsts, 6 seconds, 5 thirds, 4 fourths, and numerous specials, etc. She has been in the money under all the leading judges of Yorkshire. She took first under Mr. House at Bradford West; she has been three times to the Crystal Palace with 1st, 3rd, 4th; and she is cousin to my Yellow that took 1st and Championship Diploma at the Palace the same year that she was first, and sister to the Yellow that took first the following year. She is mother to some of my best birds which have taken a number of prizes, one of them winning three 1sts handrunning in the keenest competition, and another one that has been in the money every time out. I am glad to say she is still living, and hope she will come through the moult all right.

FIRST STEPS TOWARDS SUCCESS.

While I am writing on inbreeding it reminds me of going to hear Mr. House give a lecture on inbreeding about ten years ago. The lecture was given before one of the largest societies in Yorkshire. The room was quite full, and at the close of the lecture the Chairman announced that Mr. House would answer any question that anyone liked to put; all was silent for a short time, and then a very old breeder and exhibitor rose and said: "Mr. Chairman, does Mr. House think of coming here to tell that talo and expect us to believe it? Neither Mr. House nor anyone else will ever by inbreeding breed a bird good enough for the show bench, for birds that are inbred to any extent will be small and puny; you cannot get them big enough." In conversation with this fancier after the lecture, I ventured the opinion that Mr. House's idea commended itself to me, and that no doubt there was reason and truth in what he had said on the subject. My fellow fancier greeted me with the remark, "Nawther him nor thee'll iver dew it." Well, I may say that man was wrong, for I have proved the truth of Mr. House's contentions. I have birds in my room to-day seven inches long, all inbred, and I have put winning birds on the show bench every year since that time.

HOW I TREAT MY STOCK

First, as regards cages, some of mine are the ordinary double breeding cage, 18 inches by 16, and some are single, and I have a stack of small ones for keeping my show birds in. At the end of February I commence to get them ready for the breeding season. I take the fronts out, give the cages a good wash, scrub all the perches, then I turpentine all the cracks and corners and anywhere that I think red mite can lodge. I next mix sufficient whitewash to do for the lot as near as I can, so that they will be all one colour when finished. When I have got everything ready, it is pretty near time to start breeding. I commence this about the 22nd of March. I fill all the seed hoppers with good mixed seed. I do not believe in forcing them with egg food, etc. I sand the bottoms of the cages, because I think it is best for them; it keeps their feet hard and the birds in condition. Some fanciers prefer sawdust, but I don't like the idea, as it is apt to make the feet soft. When I have prepared my cages, I cut all the claws of the birds to prevent them from pricking the eggs when the hen is setting. I then run my birds into their cages, one cock with two hens. I do not like pair breeding, as I think you have a much better chance to breed winners with one cock to two hens and let the hens bring up the broods by themselves. When they have paired nicely, and the hen seems ready for laying, which should be in about a week, I put the nest pan in the cage, I do not care for putting it in too soon, as some hens jump in, and in this way prevent the cock from doing his duty, with the result that you will have a nest of bright eggs. When I have given them their nest pans, I go round the room and put a little treacle into all the drinkers, to prevent the hens from being egg-bound. I do this twice a week, and in this way find things work very well.

THE CARE OF THE COCKS.

I keep a sharp look out, so as to prevent the cocks from going the back way, as at this time of the year when the cold east winds are blowing and the hens constantly calling, they often get run down, and their blood becomes so thin that the least bit of draught affects them. In this way a good many fanciers lose their birds, and don't know what is the cause of it. If I go into my room and find one of the cocks looking as if his feathers were put on the wrong way, I catch him, and blow the feathers up, and if the body is discoloured, I use a little turpentine to take the inflammation out; only a few drops of course. When the hens settle down to nest, I remove the mixed seed and give them plain white seed to keep down their pride.,

THE HATCHING TIME.

At the commencement of each breeding season, we are, all of us, looking forward and hoping for something better than we had in the previous years. This is the time that causes me to think ours is a fascinating hobby. There is no golden rule to success in breeding, and if we have had rather bad luck in the past, each succeeding seasou we come up again as fresh as a lark. But to come back to the birds. On the morning that my young ones are due, I listen for any noise in the nest. If I can hear a chirp I say to myself "Welcome, little stranger," and off I go to prepare some food for them. I give them hard boiled egg and home-made bread. I add a few drops of milk just to make it moist and put a little maw seed with it. In a corner of the cage I put a dish with hemp seed and a little German rape. It is better not to crack the hemp seed, as it keeps the hen off the nest a little longer if she has to crack it herself, and so allows the young ones to get a bit of fresh air. When the young are about 4 days old, I give a little green food, watercress, or a bit of lettuce for a change. When they are about sixteen or seventeen days old it is wise to give them another nest pan, on the other side of the cage, to prevent the mother from plucking them.

WHEN I WEAN.

When the young are twenty-one days old, I take them away and place them in a good roomy cage each brood by themselves. When I take them away to themselves, I make their food a little softer in order to supply them with sufficient moisture until they find the water. After they have found the water I make the egg food a little dryer again, and mix a bit of boiled German rape in it for a change. I also give them a small dish of crushed white seed. I believe crushed white seed is one of the best things you can give to young birds. it is the natural food for them, and they will soon leave the egg food for it. All fanciers know what a tedious job it is to crush seed unless they have a good machine, and I may here say that I use "Wilson's Patent Seed Crushing Machine," which I firmly believe to be the best on the market. I am agent for it in this neighbourhood, and I have supplied all the leading fanciers round about here, and all who have one are highly satisfied with it. I believe the life of many a good bird is to be saved by its use. This machine will crush a pound of seed per minute, and can be regulated in a second to crack any kind of seed you require, even linseed.

SORTING AND TRAINING THE BABES.

When my young birds are four weeks old, I look them over, and if there is one that looks promising I run him out into a show cage and have a good look at him. I handle him nicely, and speak kindly to him, so as to gain his confidence. If I think he is going to make a right one, I hang a show cage on to let him and the others run in and out as they please, and in a day or two I remove the best one into a cot of his own in order to train him for the First Feather Show. I then run him in the show cage three or four times a day, and in this way I train my birds. When the First Feather Shows are over, all the best birds are singled out into a cage by themselves ready for the moult.

MOULTING AND COLOUR FEEDING.

In the first place, I count up my birds to see how much colour-food I shall require, and purchase all at once. Thus, if I have sixty birds to colour, I should buy about 6 lbs. cold, 2 lbs. of hot pepper, 2 lbs. of Demerara sugar, and three-pennyworth of the best raw linseed oil, mix it all well together, and keep in a large air-tight tin to keep it sound and sweet. When my birds are about nine weeks old I give them a little bit of colour-food just to get them in, and a few drops of saffron and rum in their water every other day. I mix my food each day in the following manner: one hard boiled egg, a good thick slice of bread, each put through the egg mill, add a little maw seed, and about one part colour to two parts egg and bread, moisten with a little water and serve out about half-a-teaspoonful to each bird. When the colour shows nicely down the breast, I pull their tails out, but I don't believe in flighting. I give them a little plantain and shepherd's purse to help them through, and when they are getting well through I give them a bath once or twice a week to keep them nice and clean for the first show.

PREPARING FOR EXHIBITION.

When I have got them nicely through I give them a diet of three parts white seed, one part German rape, and a little mixed seed. Once or twice a week, I also give a little egg bread and maw seed mixed dry. When I have got them into good condition I commence to prepare for exhibition. I believe in washing my birds in the old fashioned way. This is the way I have always done well with, and of course I say stick to the bridge that carries you over. If you are doing well you cannot be doing better. I have a few old show cages that I keep for washing my birds, this keeps my best cages from getting spoiled with the fire when they are drying. I well wash these cages, scrub the perches, and put a clean paper in the bottom. I then select the birds I am going to send out, and bring them downstairs for the bath. I use three large basins and a badger hair brush, good white curd soap, and drying cloths made of white bleached cotton; these latter are washed and ironed every time they are used. I believe in everything being carried out in a clean and careful manner. I make up a good clear fire and place a board across the fender on which to dry the birds. As I wash them, I roll them in the cloth and place them on the board with their tails towards the fire and let them remain twenty minutes.

ONE BIRD, ONE CLOTH.

Some fanciers take them out and roll them in two or three cloths, but I don't believe in this, because you are apt to curl the feather, if you don't get it down in the second cloth as you did in the first, and thus your bird will be spoiled. After I take each bird out of the cloth I place him in a cage, and put him about a yard from the fire. Every few minutes I move it further away, and when I think he is dry enough he is placed on the table. After they are all dry I give them their seed and water, cover them up and leave them downstairs till the morning, to prevent them catching cold. They are returned to the bird-room next morning, and put into clean cages until the show. I hope this article may prove of some benefit to your novice readers, and wish your paper every success.

THE YELLOW PLANTAIN EATER OR HANGNEST

(Icterus xanthornis).

By W. T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

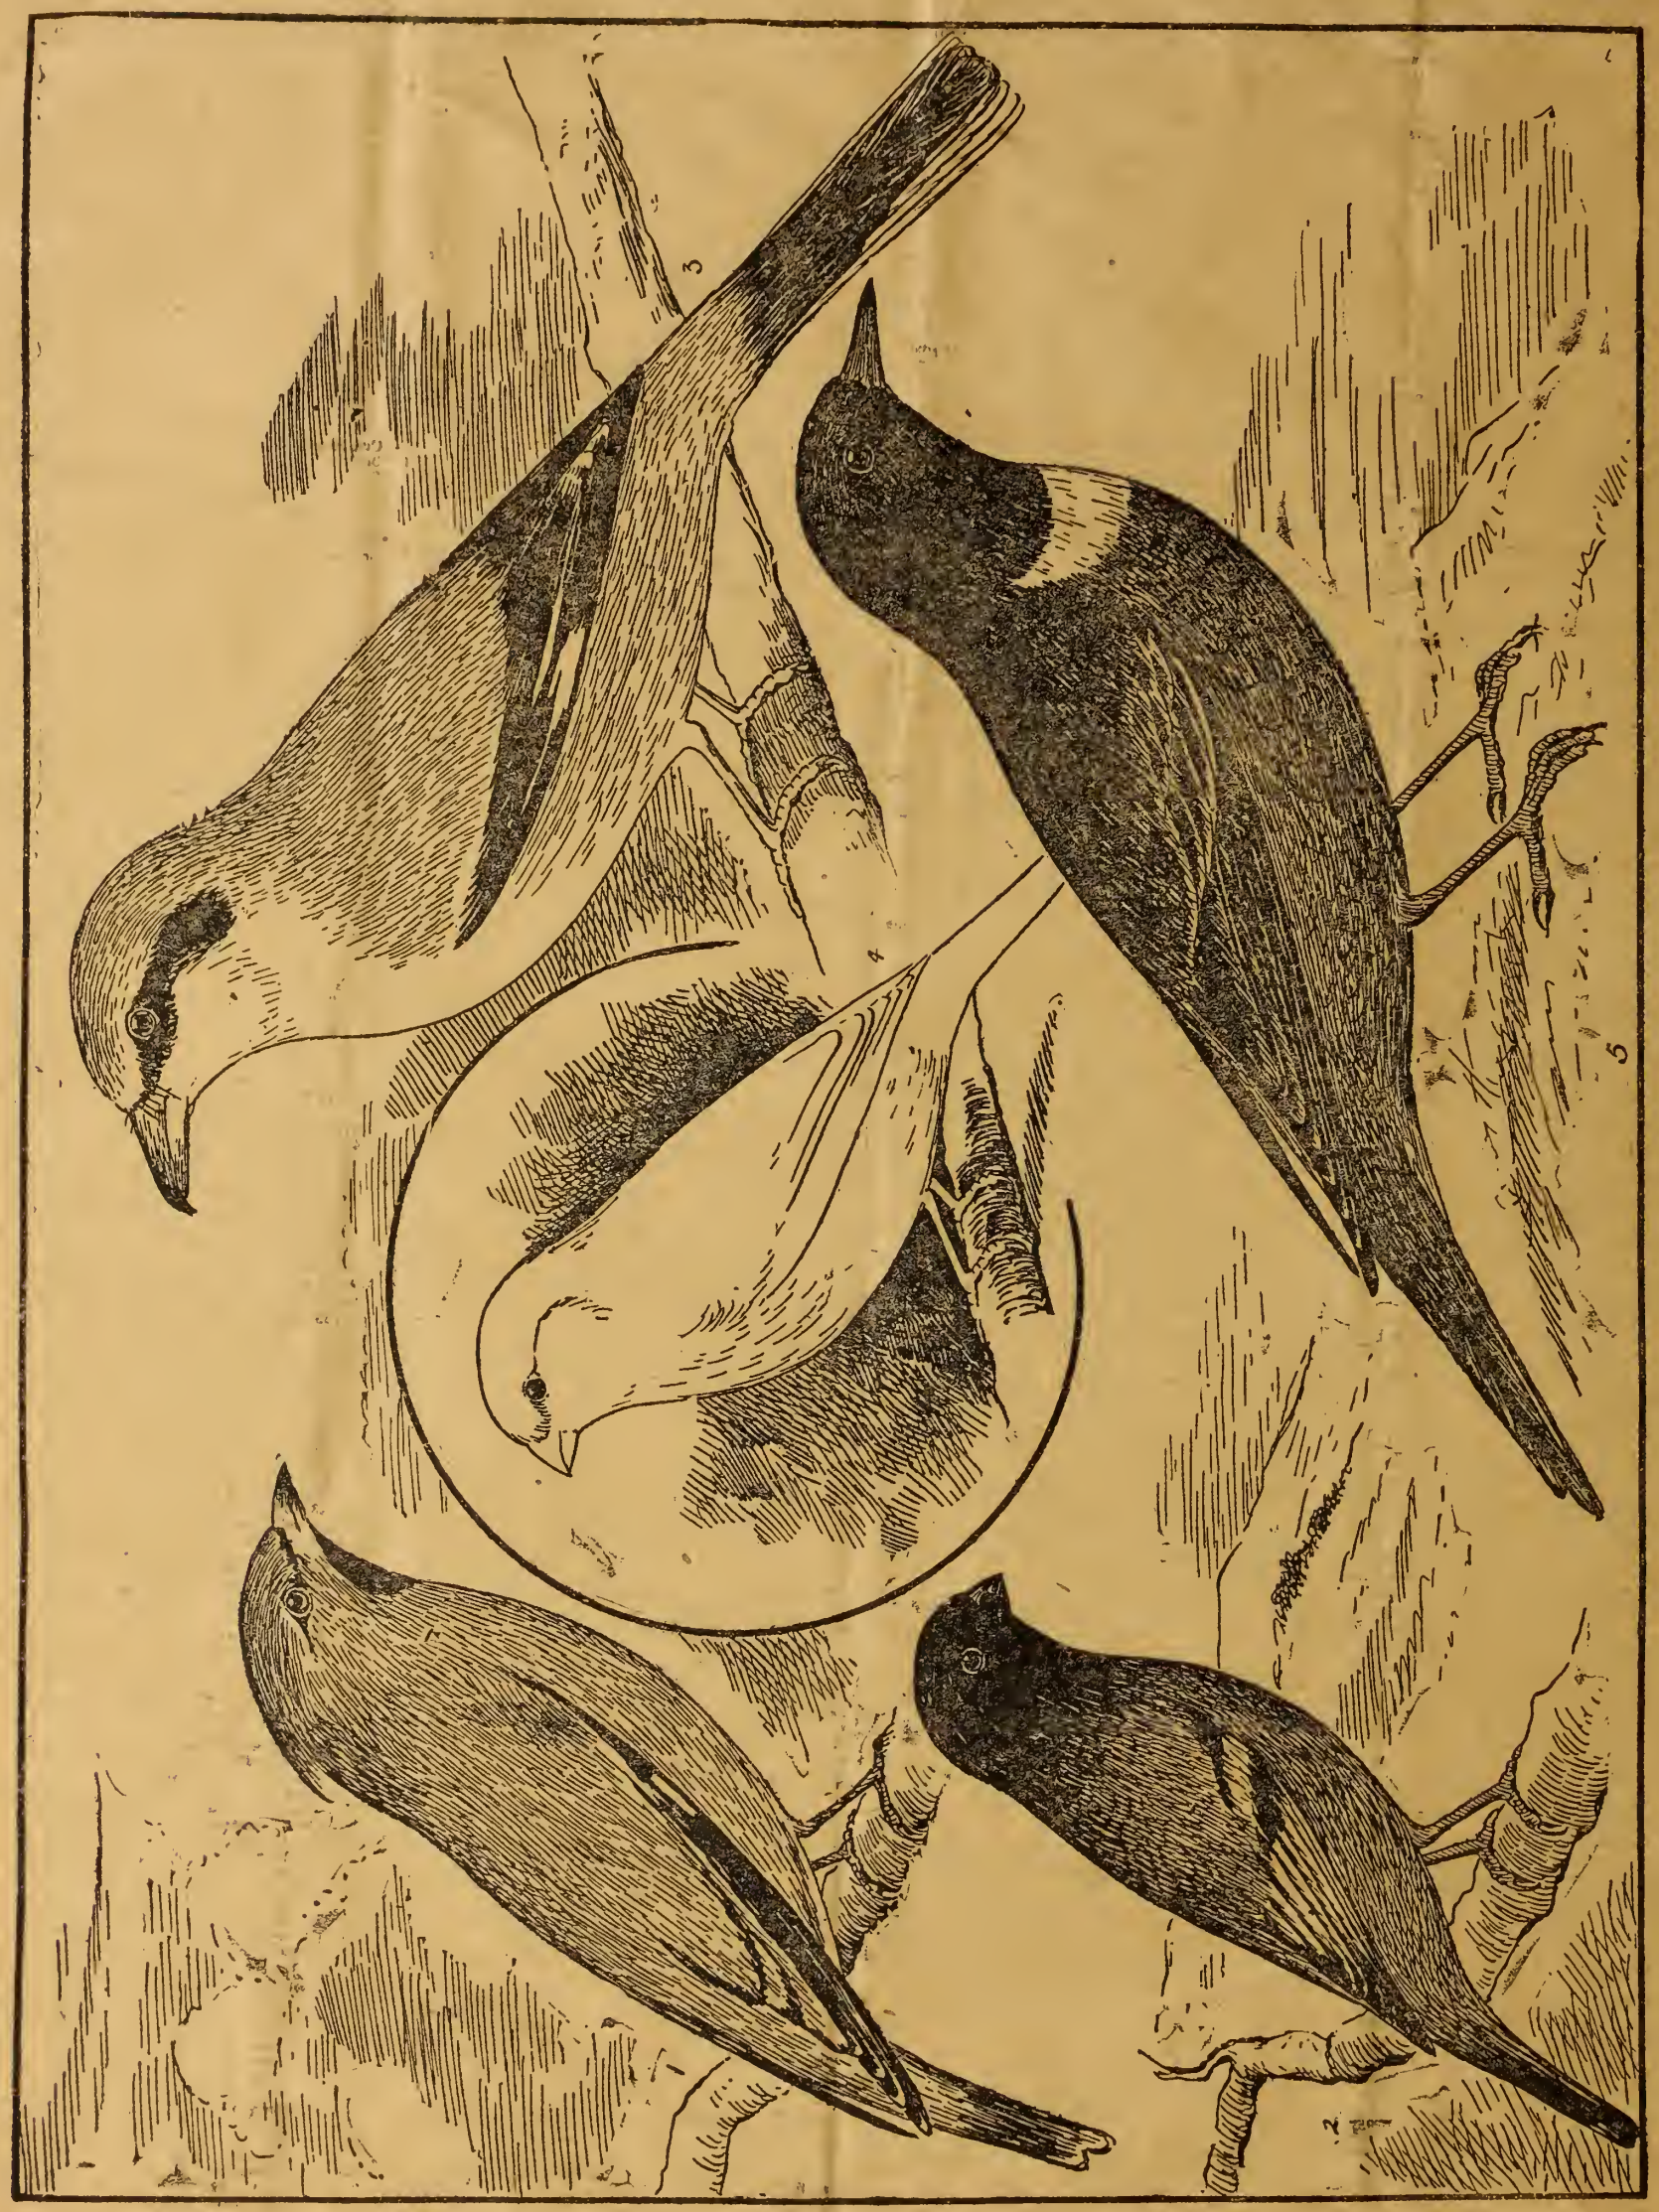
Among the rare birds recently presented to the Zoo by an esteemed friend and fellow-aviculturist was one of these fine and handsome birds, and it may now be seen disporting itself in the Western Aviary at our London Gardens.

BEAUTY OF PLUMAGE.

This is exceedingly beautiful, the colours being very intense and effulgent. Upper parts, brilliaut yellow, washed with olivacious on the interscapulium; lores, wings, and middle of throat, velvety black; lesser wing-coverts, yellow, slightly washed with green in some specimens; the greater wing-coverts, secondaries and primaries are finely edged with white, those markings being somewhat variable (comparing three skins which reached me from Georgetown, British Guiana, last summer, all are distinctly marked with white, but in one specimen especially these markings are very distinct and also broad compared with the type); under parts, bright yellow; tail, black; bill, legs, and feet, black. Total length, 7.5in., of which the tail measures 3.5in. The female is similar as to plumage, but if my skins are correctly sexed she is slightly the larger bird, and her bill is a trifle shorter than that of her mate.

The above descriptions are from skins sent to me direct from British Guiana. With them I also received two nests and a pair of eggs.

These birds nest in colonies, and suspend their elongated purse-shaped nests from the branches. The sizes of the nests in my cabinet are respectively 14 inches long and 4 inches diameter, and 12 inches by 4 inches. The eggs are very pale bluish-green, lined and spotted with black; size, 1-1/8in. by 9/16in.



CHARACTERISTICS AND DIET.

This is given by the British Museum Catalogue of birds as Northern Columbia, Venezuela, Trinidad, Guiana, Cayenne, and Upper Rio Negro. The skins, nests, and eggs described herein were taken in Georgetown, British Guiana. In the aviary, these and in fact all the Hangnests, are most desirable and beautiful inmates, but they should not be associated with birds weaker or smaller than themselves; also, either as single birds or in pairs, they are cage-birds par excellence. Though I believe the afore-mentioned specimen at the Zoo to be the first living specimen imported to this country, there is no reason why they should not be freely imported if they were inquired for, as they can be taken quite close to port. They would require dieting on ripe fruit, living insects, and some good soft food mixture, and the only protection they would require would be to be kept free from draught. No photograph can properly convey a correct idea of the contrast between the beautiful yellows and black of the plumage. They are active, fearless birds, of fine form and erect carriage, and would be a source of continuous pleasure and interest to their owner, whether kept in a cage or flying at large in the aviary.

All the Hangnests are handsome and interesting birds, and my remarks as to I. xanthornis would, as regards food, treatment, and demeanour, apply pretty well to all the species. All this genus are desirable inmates of either cage or aviary, and all (even the Black Hangnest) are exceedingly handsome and interesting birds. The term Plantain-eater, though correct enough in regard to the partly-frugivorous habits of the birds. is not a very happy one, being also applied to some Touracous (Musophagidæ).

Order it at once from your Newsagent
No show secretary should be without this invaluable index to exhibitors all over the country. If any section be weak, reference to the Register of Wins will immediately enable a whip up to be sent.
"I have received the ANNUAL (part 2), with thanks. It might well have been called "Cage Birds Directory." There is no doubt it will be very useful in this way, comprising, as it does, the names and addresses of almost every exhibitor of cage birds of any note. It will also be very useful to fanciers when they are purchasing stock. They can see at a glance whether the advertiser has done any winning with his birds, and in this way save the cost of part 2 many times over.—THOS. ROBSON, 41, Shield-st., Newcastle-on-Tyne."
Parts 1 & 2 of "Cage Birds Annual" complete for 1 3, post free. If you have already ordered Part I. from us, send us 9d. and we will post you on Part II.

Some Exceptional and Interesting British Bird Exhibits.

1. Waxwing (Bailey Bros.).
2. Black Bullfinch (W. Raper).
3. Great Grey Shrike (S. W. Birchley).
4. White Bullfinch (S. Gill).
5. Ring Ousel (C. Burrows).

Owing to the regrettable resignation of Mr. John R. Evans all correspondence should be addressed to me at 60, Neptune Road, Wallsend. Please put the star to our show dates, Nov. 8th and 9th, as we are all strong unionists here, and our show is held under C.B.U. rules, thanks for the splendid picture and report this week.—JAS. JOHNSTON, hon. sec., Wallsend C.B.A.

After the great uproar made in a certain interested quarter over CAGE BIRDS advertisements, in the Cage Bird Union rules last season, it is amusing to note that for this season CAGE BIRDS has been able to secure the entire advertisement rights in all The Cage Bird Union Show Rules. These were put up for public tender, and CAGE BIRDS, as usual, led the way.

Mr. J. A. Reece, the well-known cage specialist of Jockey Wire Works, Bristol, has recently issued a revised price list of cages. In it are examples of show, breeding, flight, and ornamental cages of every description and character, whilst the make, finish, and price is such as to please the most fastidious. Reece's cages look like upholding their past reputation.

Last week owing to an error by our printers Mr. Rudd, the well-known Canary specialist of Norwich, was made to announce that he had for disposal some "Small Yorkshires of great value." 'Twas true Mr. Rudd had some Yorkshires of great value, but it was altogether wrong to say they were small. We much regret the error, and trust that neither Mr. Rudd nor our readers have been seriously inconvenienced thereby.

Just now Cage Bird fanciers will be busy preparing their cages for the forthcoming season, and will be considering the question of paint and enamels. Mr. H. Cooper, of Luton, purveys two most excellent preparations, "Colorine," which is a sanitary, washable, water paint, and "Enamelette" which is a special enamel for show and other cages. Both are made up in various shades, and are indeed most excellent articles.

It has been decided to hold a large open show of Cage Birds, write Messrs HAY and SMART, the hon. secretaries, Main Road, Tweedmouth, under the auspices of the newly formed Berwick and District Bantam, Pigeon, and Cage Bird Society, in the Corn Exchange Hall, Berwick, on Thursday, November 28th next. The judges are:—Norwich, Mules, British, and Foreign, Mr. R. S. Bewick (Chester-le-street); Scotch and Border Fancies, Mr. W. Bell (Jedburgh).

Remarkable Offer to Canary Fanciers.—1,000 cwts. of Canary grit to be given away. During September and October we will give 1 cwt. of our Celebrated Health Grit absolutely free, to every purchaser of 1 cwt. of Canary seed. Giant Spanish, 24s. cwt.; finest Turkish, 15s. cwt. Samples on application. Carriage paid to nearest station. Cash with order.—John Dibb, seed importer, 31 and 33, White Abbey-road, Bradford. Tel. 247x. [Advt.

Mr. H. E. Tringham has kindly consented to give his washing exhibition on the 26th of this month instead of in November. This will give novices an opportunity of seeing how to go about washing their birds for our coming annual show, and it is to be hoped that they will take this opportunity and turn up in full force; it is desirable that the exhibition should commence prompt at 8 p.m., so that the birds may have the chance of getting thoroughly dry before going home.—W. HODSON, hon. sec. Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.

Border Counties N. and C.C.

Will all members note the Bowl and Noviec Gold Medal patronage has been secured this coming season by the following five shows, viz.:—Shields, Sunderland, Wallsend, Gateshead, and Berwick-on-Tweed. All bowl exhibitors to write "Bowl" at the end of bird entered on entry form. Novice exhibitors to also mark entry form "Novice and Bowl," and to send a note to Secretary Hay by morning of show, stating the three birds entered for medal or bowl. Exhibitors to also note the schedule of Neweastle, Kelso, and Morpeth, as these three shows are to have clubs patronage providing their judge is a member of club. That patronage will be the counting of most points over all shows under our patronage for Sandiford's £2 2s. cup and medal value 25s. for 1st, 2nd, and 3rd most points. Full particulars will appear in all schedules; members must join this month to compete for club specials. It was an oversight Mr. Patterson not having joined. He is again a member, and intends being one, so is Mr. Hodgson, Gateshead. Novices eligible to compete for bowl and medal with same three birds.—A. HAY, Sec., 30, Main Road, Tweedmouth.

YORKSHIREMEN AT CRICKET.

Windhill v. Bradford West.

On Saturday last the Windhill and District O.S., and the Bradford West C.B.A played a cricket match, when the Windhill men were again too good for the West men. After the match the two teams and friends sat down to a splendid tea provided by Host Helliwell. After tea the evening was spent in an enjoyable manner, songs being given by Messrs. Moor, Sugden, and F. Drake, and recitations by E. Broadley. The usual toasts brought a pleasant evening to a close.

BRADFORD WEST:—E. Clegg, 11; J. M. Stirk, 0; W. Armstrong, 0; F. Western, 3; J. Greaves, 9; A. Pratt, 0; T. Clegg, 0; G. A. Bennett, 13; H. Clegg, 0; W. A. Cowgill, 3; A. Cooper, 1; J. W. Dowhurst, not out, 0; total, 40.

WINDHILL:—H. Bailey, 2; J. Chippendale, 30; J. Cook, 1; J. W. Verity, 0; R. Garnett, 6; extras, 4; total, 43.

"THE POULTRY WORLD."

A New Poultry Paper.

I have for some time past been aware of the need for a new and energetic weekly periodical devoted entirely and thoroughly to the hobby of poultry keeping. At the request of several prominent poultry fanciers, I have decided to try and supply that need. My plans for starting a practical up-to-date poultry journal have been maturing slowly but steadily, and now the time is ripe for announcing the project. A certain amount of capital and talent has been definitely provided for. The title has been decided on, viz., "THE POULTRY WORLD." Its price has been fixed at one penny, and it will make its appearance every week. The exact date of first issue will be announced later.

F. CARL.

Our Scotch fancy judge is Mr. W. D. Hogg. We have secured the patronage of the Scottish Plainhead Club, with the £5 5s. Sandiford challenge cup, and ditto £2 2s. Novice cup, both to be won outright this season, also three S.P.C. medals, Scottish B.B. and M. Club with five medals, Border Fancy C.C. medal. We hope the members of these clubs will not overlook our date, October 26th. I may say that CAGE BIRDS is the only paper we are advertising in.—J. LOGAN, Sec., Dysart C.B.S.

I have received orders, repeat orders and testimonials for my self-acting springnet trap, from all over England, writes MR. A. BUTLER, of Sheffield. I think this speaks well for your paper. As an advertising medium it quite puts your contemporaries in the shade.

SINGING CONTESTS.

LEEDS.

The usual contest took place at the Prince Albert Inn on September 8th. Three prizes were given, and some grand singing was heard—1 and 2 shared by J. Clark. On September 15th J. Clark won again. Judges, B. Jackson and H. Haldon.

Linnet singing at the Old Bird House, King's Head, Shannon Street, is now under new management, that of a real old bird man, Mr. W. Tillotson. This week-end 30 of the best birds in Leeds sung for four prizes, and some very good singing was heard before a crowded house:—1, Hardcastle; 2, 4, Biss; 3, Stead. Judges, T. Summers and C. Cooper. Timekeeper, E. Worth. This house looks like getting back to its old form. We wish old friends and new to give us a call, and hear some of the best birds that have been in Leeds for some time.—T. SUMMERS, Hon. Sec.

LONDON, N.

There was attendance of fanciers at the Bee Hive, Pentonville-road, the other evening, and arrangements were made for Linnet and Chaffinch handicaps to commence the first week in October, and continue each week-end.—T. MORRISON.

OUR GREAT COUPON SCHEME.

A STRIKING SUCCESS.

CAGE BIRDS Coupon Scheme has caught on. There can be no doubt about it. The letters that have come in since last week's issue appeared, place the success of the idea so far as societies are concerned—beyond the region of failure. More societies have to be added to the ranks of those participating. Appended is a complete list of Coupon Shows, also a few more expressions of opinion upon the competition. A few doubtful points are touched on by correspondents, and answered. We are still receiving societies, but secretaries and committees should lose no further time.

OUR COUPON SHOWS.

CHELTENHAM.

(Show held October 26th and 27th.)

At our last meeting it was unanimously decided to adopt your prize competition.—A. S. TREASURE, Grove Villa, Tivoli, Cheltenham.

THE POTTERIES.

(Show held on October 23rd and 24th.)

It was unanimously decided that we join for CAGE BIRDS prize scheme. It was thought by the members to be a very good scheme, and one that will cause a good deal of interest.—J. SIMCOCK, 157, Leonard-road, Birches Head, Hanley.

WIGAN.

(Show held December 6th and 7th.)

I read the particulars of CAGE BIRDS great prize scheme to our meeting on Monday evening last, and everyone present was favourably impressed and very much appreciate your kindly interest. We shall be pleased to co operate.—W. RIDGE, 55, Poolstock, Wigan.

CAMBRIDGE C.B.S.

(Show held November 12th.)

We shall be pleased to go in for your competition, and, of, course, abide by the rules. Please let me know exactly how much matter we have to print. Also can one exhibitor enter more than one bird if he likes to pay 6d. for each coupon he sends for. I expect he can.—T. S. MOORE, 126-8, Newmarket-road, Cambridge.

(We have sent you matter to occupy exactly one page, no more, no less, in schedule and catalogue. Easy setting. One exhibitor can enter as many birds as he pleases, provided he pays 6d. for each bird he desires to compete with. But previous coupon prize winners will be barred, of course.—ED. C.B.)

PORTSMOUTH.

I brought CAGE BIRDS prize competition before two of the committee of our show (Portsmouth), and they promised to inquire about it. Please let me know if the 25s. already guaranteed for advts. in CAGE BIRDS covers the prize scheme, or if it is an additional 25s. required to participate in same.—F. G. JOINER.

(We only require one guarantee of 25s. from any Society, but we do not appear to have received any guarantee from Portsmouth up to date.—ED. C.B.)

Y.C.C. OF IRELAND.

Kindly let me know for the committee's information, if I were to get six coupons from you, could I enter six birds at the one show and win, say, two or more C.B. prizes.—W. C. SHOLEDICE.

There is no objection to exhibitors purchasing as many coupons as they require, and winning two or more CAGE BIRDS prizes, but not more than one prize can be won by an individual bird.—ED. C.B.)

WOLVERHAMPTON SHOW.

October 30th and 31st.

I read the conditions of your great prize scheme before our members' last meeting, and all were of the opinion that the outlay to the Society would be so small compared with the possible gain that this Society will be pleased to accept your Coupon Competition.

F. HOWES, Hon. Sec.
25, Leslie Road, Park Village, Wolverhampton.

Mr. R. Pooley (Sheffield) does not seem to have grasped our scheme. He is afraid it will not offer much inducement to any but the cracks to compete. But he must not overlook the fact that the best third or fourth prize bird is a long way from being the third best bird in the show. It might easily belong to an entire novice.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

Not Singing.

Novice.—Your bird is probably moulting, or about to commence, and this would account for it not singing, but apart from this I fancy from your description of him that he is not quite the thing. Let him have a little egg food three times a week, over which put five drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. A small teaspoonful of egg food will be sufficient. In addition to the plain canary seed, let him have twice a week a half-teaspoonful of the following mixture—hemp, rye and linseed. Put in his drinking water fresh daily for a fortnight, fifteen drops of Syrup of Tolu, and five drops of Paregoric.

Colour Feeding.

B. L.—The proportions of sweet and hot peppers you are using are quite right, and so is the quantity of oil. I should advise you not to give the linseed until they are nearly through the moult. Do not use Demerara sugar; you will make your food too sticky. Use instead a little castor sugar. You may give with advantage a piece of sulphate of iron about the size of a small pea in each bird's drinking water twice a week, but not until they are nearing the completion of their moult. You may lift the cover of the cages if you wish, for half an hour in the day, as this will not affect the colour. I should advise you to put some brown paper over the cages which you have your late hatched birds in; let it come down to within about three inches of the wire front. Put it right up against the cages. Let them have a little egg food three times a week.

Shells His Seed.

Keppochile.—If you are feeding your bird on mixed seed the probability is that he throws out the seed in his quest for the particular seed he fancies. It is a mistake to give birds mixed seed in their hopper or feeding pot. This should only contain plain Spanish Canary, and as a tit-bit a small teaspoonful of mixed seeds may be given twice a week, composed of the following: Hemp seed, niger and German rape in equal parts. You may also give him about as much maw seed as will stand on a shilling twice a week. I must congratulate you upon your successful season's breeding and wish you may have the same good results next year.

ROLLERS.

Answered by "SCHOOLMASTER."

Concerning Exhibiting.

Noel.—(1) Certainly; you can show your Rollers at any exhibition which provides classes for singing. It does not matter whether you are a member of any Roller Club, or not—all fanciers of Rollers are eligible to compete. At the same time, you will do well to join the British Roller Canary Club, which will put you in touch with fellow fanciers of the breed, and you can also then compete for their special prizes. (2) You will have to compete against imported birds in the open classes (or bought birds, to put it another way). But classes are also provided at most fixtures for young birds (bred 1907), and in those you would simply have to compete against youngsters bred and trained by fellow Roller fanciers in England. I wish you luck.

Singing Canaries for Profit.

Silliw.—Your question is an awkward one. I might, for instance, advise you how to go about the breeding, but then your season might be a failure, and the profit nil, owing to your unsuitable room, or arrangements, or methods. If you have had no experience of Canary breeding, you certainly want to get in touch with some old, conscientious fancier, who would give you some sound advice on such matters. If you want to breed simply "good singing birds," then you could not do better than get a stoutly-built, good-coloured yellow Norwich cock, and pair him to two or three good German hens. A similar cock bird of Yorkshire type could also be used. In fact, the number of pairs (or "households," rather) would, of course, only depend on the extent of your operations. From the above mating you would get bigger, better-shaped and coloured youngsters than by sticking to pure Germans. Train them under a first-class "schoolmaster," by all means (a bird-organ, too, would be a great help). By these means you would, I feel sure, succeed in producing a lot of young (given good fortune), which would be good singers of an attractive song mixture, and command a ready sale. The advertising columns of "Cage Birds" will afford you a ready sale for any surplus stock.

SCOTCH FANCIES.

Answered by R. WRIGHT.

Management and Slip Claw.

T.G.—For the slip claw give one rough perch (not high up). Wet the claw with whisky every morning, when the heat will bring back the nerve to it. You take the egg food away far too soon. I always give my birds a bit every morning, the size of a bean, till through the moult. You are quite right in giving rape three times a week. Don't work young birds much when moulting. I give mine a run into show cages three times a day, morning, noon and night. Feed old birds same as young. Put in a large flight and give plenty of chickweed.

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Eggs in September.

D.E.P.—It is certainly most unusual for a hen which has been unmated since July to commence laying again in September. Your letter appears in this issue. It may, perhaps, lead to the announcement of other unusual and interesting incidents connected with laying.

Claws Bunching up.

Bert Peacock.—I am afraid you can do nothing. From your description the bird is deformed beyond cure, and the wisest and most humane thing to do would be to destroy it.

Ticked or Marked—Which?

Puzzled.—(1) A bird which is ticked on the back of the head is most certainly not an even-marked. An even-marked bird can be marked only on eyes, wings, and tail. (2) Yellow hens are generally more or less mealy on the back, but it does not go farther. A bird which is mealed all over is undoubtedly a huff.

Moving Birds.

Traveller.—If your Canaries and British Birds are well covered, they will suffer no harm from the journey. Small boxes with wire fronts are much the best for the purpose. If you put them in large cages they will fly, knock and bang themselves about, and probably be half dead from fright and injury. If you don't like boxes, the German cages would do, but you must cover the parcel completely with stout sacking, or canvas. The two chief things to remember are that the birds must be protected from draught whilst travelling, and not have much room to fly about. The change will not harm the birds. The Parrot and Cockatoo would travel best in their wire cages.

What Sex?

Inexperienced.—From what you say I have no doubt whatever that your bird is a hen, but seeing that it is eighteen months ago that you purchased it, I am afraid you have no possible chance of recompense from the seller. If your bird is in good health next March, I should advise you to get it the mate for which you say it seems to call.

What Breed?

Young Hopeful.—Judging by the description you give, your bird is what is known as a variegated or unevenly-marked Norwich. The peculiar back marking is, as you say, very beautiful; its technical name is saddle marking. The bird is a huff; the silvery tipping of which you speak is the point that makes the difference between a yellow and a buff. If you are thinking of breeding with the bird next year, you should mate it to a clear yellow hen.

Red Ants.

Monty—There can be no shadow of doubt that the "hundreds of red ants running all over the cages, and even getting into the drinkers," as you say, have caused the death of your birds. Your cages must be simply reeking with red mite. The best thing you can do is to destroy your whole stock of cages. Thoroughly cleanse and whitewash the walls of your bird-room, and then put up a new lot of cages, but before putting the birds into them, give every one of the birds a good wash with soap and water as if washing for a show, but put a few drops of Jeyes' Fluid in both washing and rinsing waters, say half-a-teaspoonful to a quart of water. Remove the birds and old cages to another room whilst you are doing the cleaning and whitewashing, and don't let the cages into the bird-room again, nor the birds either until you have washed them. It would be advisable to mix some carbolic acid in the whitewash.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

The Sexing of Linnets.

J. H.—No one ever saw a young Linnet (that is, in nest-feathers) with a red breast. Young Linnets of both sexes are soberly-coloured and marked, very like adult hens. It is astonishing how the seasonal changes of coloration of the Linnet puzzle fanciers—even to making some of them believe there are two distinct kinds of birds. Briefly, the red breast, and the red head, too, are "breeding plumes," assumed by the male bird only, in the spring, at the coming of the breeding season. The older the male, the more vivid and expansive the said coloration. Many first-season males show very little trace of it at all, some seeming more tinged with yellow than red, and being termed "stone Linnets." These matters I have many times explained in this column. I do not consider the so-called "mooning" on the breast a safe guide to the sex. It is true that the majority of hens are heavily streaked on the breast, while the cocks are not so, and this is a good guide to the sex when one gets well acquainted with the Linnet fancy. As a guide for the beginner, however, the "old, old" signs want a lot of beating. Look with suspicion on a bird thickly streaked with pencilling; look for a distinct warm, nutty-brown tone of colour on the shoulders (wing butts) and back generally; look for plenty of white in the wings (extending back to the shaft of the feathers) and tail. If you get the two latter things, you get a cock. Even the young hens are appreciably dingier (more ashy) and streakier-looking than the young males and carry less white. Of course, one occasionally comes across a male carrying heavy pencilling—these are just the boys for exhibition purposes.

An Outdoor Thrush.

Herbell.—Your young Thrush ought to commence to "tune up" as soon as it throws off the effects of the moult. Young hand-reared hen Song Thrushes will "record," but not with the same gusto and seeming relish as young males. You want to let your bird hear a good free-singing adult Thrush or Blackbird, as a tutor, for by doing so you will greatly improve its song in variety and finish—all hand-reared birds are the better when this practice is followed. I cannot advise you to let the bird hang out of doors all the winter, regardless of the weather, even though you cover its cage with a sack or two at night, as you suggest doing. The greater part of the winter it would not hurt, no doubt; but there are certain weather conditions under which I would never let any bird of my own remain out of doors in a cage. Lift the Thrush down into an unheated room when your own good sense tells you the weather is unfit.

The Giving of Seeds, &c.

Ignoramus.—Pleased to hear your losses of Linnets have ceased since giving the stock mixture advised. Although many fanciers are doubtless giving their birds turnip seed in the blissful belief that it is "summer rape," I cannot recommend it as a substitute for charlock, seeing that the latter can be bought from many advertisers using our columns—and, I should think, from most town shops making a speciality of bird seeds. Still, good turnip seed won't hurt Linnets. You did quite right to add a percentage of hemp to the stock mixture, now the Linnets are moulting; let the linseed be supplied liberally, too. The shepherd's purse and plantain can be supplemented by any of the other suitable wild plants mentioned in the articles now running—glad to know you like the latter. It is no use putting rusty nails in a bird's drinking water, for they have no effect one way or the other. You must let the Linnets bathe freely, or lightly spray them regularly. They should soon get tame if hung in box cages about breast high in a room where people are much on the move. Try to gain their confidence by talking to them when near, and placing titbits of wild-food, etc., between the wires. Gradually leave the hemp out of the stock mixture when the moult is over, giving a little occasionally only, and also reduce the quantity of linseed.

A Family; and Colour Feeding.

Josh-o Brum.—Your aviary is not a good shape—ornamental, but not practical, I am afraid. It is length and width which count, not height. You say your aviary is 30 inches long, 48 high, and 16 wide—well, if it were 48 long, 30 high and 24 wide, it would be of very good and practical dimensions. On the rule of a foot of floor space to each bird the size of a Canary (a fairly good rough guide with small aviaries), your place will hold exactly three birds, yet you purpose putting 4 Linnets, 3 Redpolls, 1 Bramblefinch and 1 Chaffinch therein—9 birds altogether! With the Bramblefinch and Chaffinch you would have trouble, I fancy, for they can be very spiteful and offensive in confined quarters. The Linnets and Redpolls would probably do all right in the aviary, providing it were kept quite clean. Such a place as yours is really more suitable for a collection of small Foreign birds, than for British. By-the-way, you say a Bramblefinch and a "Pied Finch," but I assume Chaffinch is meant by the latter name, which I have heard used in connection with that bird. As regards colour-feeding the young Mule, you should send sevenpence to this office for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which will give you far fuller details of the process than I could possibly get into these answers of mine. Young mules are colour-fed in precisely the same way as young Canaries. You will have to hurry up and get the bird on to colour-food, or it will be in the moult before you make a start. If only intended for a songster, and the only bird you have, it is hardly worth while trying to enhance its colour. An all-wire cage, oblong design, makes a good home for a pet singing mule.

Nightingale "Throws Something Up."

H. Clarke.—1. There is nothing whatever the matter with your bird. The throwing-up of the pellets is a quite natural proceeding—one followed by many "soft-billed" birds. The pellets (or castings) comprise the indigestible portions of the food swallowed—such as the skins of berries, of mealworms, the cases of beetles, etc. Owls, for example, cast up the fur and bones of mice they eat. You must not be tempted or persuaded to try any "curative measures," whatever they may be. 2. I should think (a) that your mealworm tin is not sufficiently ventilated, and (b) that it is not kept in a sufficiently dry, warm place. I should start a fresh box, transfer any beetles to it, and use up the mealworms in the old box. 3. Gentles can be quite sufficiently "scoured" by throwing them for a few days, before using, into a quantity of dry, clean bran. Always keep them in a very cool place.

Feeding Goldfinch Mules.

G. Cook.—Pity you did not state exactly how old the "young Goldfinch Mules" are. If just out of the nest give lightly cracked hemp (fresh made each day), and plenty of maw, canary and teazle; also give some soaked rape daily. When they are feeding themselves properly, the following stock mixture will be difficult to beat: Canary, two pints, teazle one pint, hemp, summer rape and linseed half-pint each. By way of variety offer every day a little maw, or lightly cracked sunflower seed, or a tiny pinch of niger, while once a week they may have a feed of some good maker's packet Finch mixture. In their earliest days they may have ripe shepherd's purse and chickweed, to which later may be added thistle-heads, hardheads, plantain, groundsel, etc — see current article on "Wild Plants." Fed judiciously on the above lines, your Mules should thrive splendidly. Such a book as you mention may be published from this office one of these days, in the near future.

Briefiets.

A Heavy Drinker (Ban).—Put six or seven drops of tincture of gentian in the Linnet's drinking water for a week or so. If this does not cure, write me again. Feed on plenty of maw and ripe plantain, shepherd's purse, etc.

Three Seed Samples (Hampton Court)—I cannot see any fault to find with either of the three samples you submit to me. The German rape and wild seed mixture both appear well up to the mark, and the same may be said of the winter rape, though the latter is not so large as most winter (English) rape one sees—possibly it is some other variety of "rape," of which there are many, almost as "like as two peas."

What Class? (Joey).—Redpolls (both Lesser and Mealy) are most certainly both true Finches from the point of view of the ornithologist, and most certainly must be entered in the Finch class at shows—a class headed "A.O.S. Finch," for instance. If a class is provided for (or definitely includes) the Lesser Redpoll, then the Mealy would have to go in either the "A.O.S. Finch" class, or, if such is not provided, in the class for "A.O.S. British Bird." It is not possible, however, to state for certain the class, everything depending on the wording of the schedule.

Some Weeds.

F.S.M.—I do not recognise the two weeds as anything I myself gather. The one you think "cole" looks like common hedge mustard. The other is certainly not gold of pleasure, as reference to the article in "Wild Plants" this week will show you. Both were in too dry and withered a state when I got them to render identification possible. Gold of pleasure you are not at all likely to find in a wild state. If you peruse and are guided by the series of articles above referred to, you will find quite sufficient "weeds" described for all practical purposes—you need not bother your head about any more.

"Picks Holes in Its Body."

Master Jim.—I presume you mean the Siskin picks holes in its plumage—my imagination boggles at a bird which picks holes in its body, i.e., the flesh. I think the matter is easily explainable, seeing that you admit the Siskin is moulting. Many birds then are continually pecking about amongst their plumage, and while they are doing this, one often notices feathers fall to the cage floor—I have no doubt that the bird's attentions result in its old coat being shed more quickly and easily, though no doubt the feathers would fall, sooner or later, even if the bird did not peck amongst them. In any case, this sort of thing is nothing to be alarmed at, but rather something to welcome. Give me a bird which goes quickly through its moult, even though at one time it may look half bare—it makes up for it in the end. Birds that drag a long time in the moult are never the healthiest. I have had Nightingales shed their body plumage with such suddenness that their bare breast, etc., has been plainly visible. To revert to your Siskin, you will find that this habit you fancy he has contracted will cease as soon as the new plumage has been assumed. If he will not bathe, the best plan is to spray him lightly every morning (unless a very cold, damp day) with water in which a few spots of Scrubbs cloudy ammonia has been placed—just sufficient to slightly cloud it. Never drench the bird, and keep him out of draughts until dry.

Young Goldfinches Dying.

Lover of Goldies.—I should think your birds die from inflammation of the bowels. Your feeding does not commend itself to me; it is not good enough. Young Goldfinches (Greypates), or any fresh-caught Goldfinches, want maw and niger seeds in plenty until such time as they can be weaned off them. They should likewise have teazle, linseed, canary, and lightly-cracked hemp (the latter freshly made every day), while a little coarse oatmeal and cracked sunflower often gets eaten. In addition to the above, a plentiful supply of thistle-heads, knapweed, sow-thistle, seeding groundsel, etc., is simply invaluable with such birds. I note the "aviary" you say you keep them in—it really is only a good-sized cage, and if, as I suspect, all wire, is not suitable for the purpose. Goldies do far the best in a box-pattern cage, that is, wired in front only. I hardly understand your query re insect food. You write "buy or find," so I presume you mean live food. Mealworms form the only kind commonly on offer, though in the season live ants' eggs (cocoons) are to be bought, likewise gentles (well scoured, from any good fishing-tackle shop), and wasp grub. If this is not what you want to know, kindly send another question along. It is against the rules to recommend particular advertisers. By-the-bye, try your ailing Goldie with a dose of sulphate of soda—as much as will lie on a shilling dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Repeat, but at half strength, after a day's interval on plain water.

Greenfinch and Red-mite.

F. L. Hill.—Plunging the cage into boiling water and afterwards well painting it with paraffin would effectually settle all the red-mite, you can rest assured. If it is a wooden cage, paint it out with a suitably-tinted (say, very light blue) sanitary washable distemper, which will dry in a few hours. The cage should stand in the open air for a few days, to dissipate the smell of paraffin, before being distempered. The distemper (or water paint) is often advertised in our columns, or may be bought from any good oil and colourman. I should think it quite likely the red-mite were at the bottom of the Greenfinch's poor plumage, and the bare place on the head I should anoint once a day for a week with a spot of the paraffin oil. Rub it on gently (the way the feathers lie) and use only a very small quantity. You must see that no red-mite are left among the plumage of the Greenie, or they will multiply apace, so that you will experience a re-entrence of the trouble later on. Give him a couple of good dustings with Keating's insect (or pure pyrethrum) powder, on different days, before returning him to his old quarters. Get the powder well down among the feathers at root of tail, under the wings, and round the neck—on the head you can rub it gently in with the tip of a finger, keeping it, of course, out of the eyes and mouth.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Zebra Finches and Canaries.

(1) Is it correct to have a pair of Zebra Finches, Linnet and three Canaries together in a cage 3 ft. by 10 in. by 3 feet high? (2) I should like to breed a few more pairs of Foreigners for profit in another aviary same size; is it better to keep to the same kind, or would you suggest others?—"Gwendolyn."

Gwendolyn.—(1) The birds you name will agree well enough together, and do fairly well as a few pets to look at and listen to; your space is fully occupied, and you could hardly look for breeding results with three pairs of birds in such limited space, though very probably occasional successes would come your way. Personally, I should choose my kind, and only keep one pair in the cage for breeding purposes, or get roomy breeding cages (box type) for breeding, and use the cages (this size is not an aviary) as flights for any young reared, or odd adult birds.—In the Spring a small husk nest, and also a travelling cage, a little hay, and leave them to follow their own "sweet will." (2) You may pay your seed bill, after your birds leave the-come established, Foreign birds do not settle down to breeding with the same precision as Canaries; for the reason they are wild-caught birds, that is not domesticated or semi-domesticated varieties, and for the matter of that the wild-caught British birds are just as erratic as our alien pets, for erratic they certainly are; i.e., they will breed freely for a year, then do nothing else, sometimes for more than a season, then again surprise you with results. As a beginner you want some species easy to keep, Zebra Finches, and Ribbon Finches (Cut-throats) are easy to keep in health, and, as a rule, free breeders; so are White Java Sparrows, Bengalese, and Budgerigars. The latter are free breeders, and easy to keep, but must not be mixed with Finches, etc., in a cage. If you make up your mind which course you will take and write again, I will give you definite advice thereon. White Java Sparrows and Budgerigars, once they settle to breeding, are likely to be the more profitable. See other reply on Budgerigars.

Breeding Budgerigars.

Can I breed them in a box cage, and what is their general treatment re feeding?—"SILLIW."

Silliw.—Yes! they can be bred in a box cage, but not with the same freedom that they do when kept in a garden aviary; nevertheless, once they commence breeding they will keep on, only stopping for the moult, whether kept in a cage or aviary; when kept in a cage the young should be removed as soon as they can fend for themselves. The cage should not be less than 2½ by 1 by 2 ft. high, hang a brak at each end, near the top of cage—no nesting material is required. When not breeding, all they require is, canary, millet, green food, cuttlefish and water ad. lib. It is well all the year round to crush what egg shells you have left from your table and scatter same over sand on cage bottom. When kept in a cage they usually take longer to settle down to breeding, but once started they usually continue without a break till the moult stops them.

Correction.

In reply to "Euphonia," last week, on What Tanager, the printer made me say "Some birds are of the family, etc.," it should read "Your birds are, etc."

Cordon Bleu Bald.

A. Baker.—I should cage this bird up separately, continue your present treatment, supplying the Parrish's food daily, and on the least sign of constipation in lieu of the chemical food (for one day only), make its drinking water just saline with Epsom salts. Try him with a little crumbled sponge cake and ants' cocoons, slightly damped and dusted over with flour or flowers of sulphur, continue this treatment for a few weeks, encourage it to take a daily bath, and let it have a little lettuce and grass in the car as green food, a little ripe fruit, if it will take it, will also be very wholesome. Keep him where he will get plenty of FRESH AIR, yet not be in a draught. I should say this bird had probably been pecked in the initial instance; Waxbills and small Finches are little demons at stripping one another. It should be kept solitary till its plumage is in good condition again.

What Parrot?

E.T.G.—From your description, it appears you have one of the species of the Alexandrine Parrakeets, and, of course, in such case it is not an Australian bird at all. It is rather more yellow on the underparts than the majority of the Alexandrines, and I believe it to be that bird, but I am keeping your query by me, and will give the matter further consideration, and give you a confirmation, or otherwise, in our next issue.

Cockatoo Moulting.

The bird is 12 months old, it has started to moult, and as the young feathers grow it pulls them out. Diet: Parrot food, boiled potatoes, bread, and fruit. What is the remedy? What is the diet for Blue Mountain or Grass Parrots?—NO NAME.

No Name.—Diet: Seed mixture, canary, oats, wheat, dari, small maize, hemp and sunflower seeds in equal parts, well mix and keep a supply continuously in its cage; also give ripe fruit, little boiled potato, plain biscuit, or stale crust of household bread, nuts, green food, and cuttlefish. Do not give slops, or any kind of animal food. It is not wise to give the magnesia regularly, it should only be given as necessary to keep it gently moving, not really loose. Make its drinking water the colour of pale port wine, by adding a few drops of Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue this for a few weeks; also spray the parts the bird is in the habit of stripping with quassia solution, this also is a good insecticide, and it will be fatal to any bird lice in the bird, and am of the opinion that these pests are largely responsible for the trouble. You will have to persevere, as once a bird starts pulling its plumage, it is very difficult to break them of the habit. I suppose your birds are Blue-Mountain Lories or Swainson's Lorikeets. If so, canary seed, green food, as much ripe fruit as they will eat, and a little milk sop (from boiled milk only, or it will not keep fresh), or sweetened boiled rice.

Indian Parrakeets, &c.

S. O. Williamson.—(1) Indian Green Parrakeets. Your friend's bird is an Alexandrine Parrakeet (Palaeornis alexandri); yours is the Ring-necked Parrakeet (P. torquata). (2) It is almost certain your Grey Java Sparrow is a female. The male has a chattering, but not unmelodious, the female being a very silent individual. Another sexual distinction is—the beak of the female is narrower and more pointed than that of the males; this distinction is most clear when the bird is viewed in profile; but this method of determining the sexes is not of much value unless there are several specimens to compare with each other. (3) Please give me where they exist, the names, the following of which I quote the dealers' names. Steel Finches: This is the well-known Combassou. Sharp-tailed Finches: No other trivial name (Uroloncha acuticauda). South African Parrots: Grey Parrots. (4) The White-throated Finch (Spermophila albigularis). Male: It is grey on the upper surface, being much darker grey on the crown and sides of the head; forehead, black; under surface white, with a broad, black band across the chest; beak, yellow-ochre; legs and feet, grey. Female: Greyish-brown above, with dark shaft streaks; under surface, white; beak, black; legs and feet, brown, lightly tinged with grey.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A Novice Exhibitor's Queries (W.C.).—(1) Certainly. Although you are not a member of the C.B.U., or any of the clubs or societies belonging to it, you can show birds at any of the Union shows. (2) You must find your own water vessels when sending birds to a show, but seed hoppers are not needed. What particular brand of water vessel you use is immaterial. The regulation water vessel can be supplied by the same man as supplies the cages.

Wild Bird Protection Act (J.K.).—We are very sorry we cannot oblige you, but space is far too valuable to print the whole of the Wild Bird Protection Act. Again, the schedule varies in different counties. You could obtain a copy for London from any Metropolitan police station.

CLUB REPORTS.

SCOTTISH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

The following shows will be held under club patronage:—City of Glasgow, Dysart, Glasgow, and West of Scotland, Dundee, Perth, Brechin, Kilmarnock, Aberdeen, Scottish National. The following competitions are offered:—£5 5s. Challenge Cup, £2 2s. Novice Challenge Cup (both cups presented by Mr. J. Sandiford—Colour Food King—for most points gained at shows held under club patronage), two gold enamelled medals, one for cocks and one for hens bred 1907, for most points gained in unflighted classes. Six shows have been granted one gold enamelled medal each for best bird shown by a member; two shows two silver medals each, one for cocks and one for hens; one show one silver medal for best bird.—D. SMITH, Secretary.

SALE OPEN O.S.

Meeting held September 9. It was decided to hold a Members' Show on November 9; Mr. Alf. Wellings has been engaged to judge. Schedule was drafted, and it was decided that we have classes for Novices, and for amateurs separate. I wonder what has come over our members; out of a total of 46, we had the splendid attendance of 8, including myself. If we cannot do better than this we had best shut up; there is not much encouragement for anyone to do their best. It is hoped that at the next meeting, to be held on September 23, every member will do his very best to attend; also bring a friend, as Mr. Alf. Wellings will give a washing exhibition, and explain how to get birds up for show; the schedule also will be finally passed, also date of the first annual dinner.—Geo. F. Hardcastle.

GLASGOW CONFINED SOUTHERN

Meeting held September 2nd. There was a large attendance of members. Mr. John Renwick was in the chair. Arrangements were made for the show on October 26. Agreed that there be 12 classes, with two classes for amateurs, first, second, third and fourth prizes in each class; Ayrshire Blankets as first, White Satin Bed Quilts as second, half-dozen Knives and Forks as third, and Half-Dozen Dessert Spoons as fourth prizes in each class, with gold medals for the best cock and best hen. A census of young birds bred by members, showed an average of 8 birds per member. Next meeting October 7, and members are reminded that they must be clear in the books at that meeting to enable them to compete at the annual show, on October 26.—J. Fleming, sec.

WEST OF SCOTLAND.

Meeting was held on September 7th, Mr. E. Boyd in the chair. Dr. Manson, who was unable to be present through pressure of business, but wrote promising to give his lecture on an early date. The schedule was revised, and will have 39 classes, same entry fee, and equal prize money. Cup winners can have the value of their medals in cash if desired. All members are requested to send a register of their birds to the secretary, see rule 7, and all members, old or new, are requested to be clear on the books on or before the first Thursday of October.—GEO. SMART, Sec.

DERBY CAGE BIRD CLUB.

Meeting held August 31st, Mr. W. H. Eley presiding. The principal business was to make further arrangements for the forthcoming open jubilee show, to be held on November 26 and 27. The Secretary reported that he had received communication from the secretaries of the Yorkshire Green Association, Yorkshire Canary Club, Cinnamon C.C., and the British Bird and Mule Club, offering their support and patronage. This should augur well for a successful show, there being 50 classes, besides members. The meeting allotted the different classes to the following judges:—Mr. Jos. Bexson, both open and members' Yorkshires; Mr. J. H. Roe, open Norwich and Cinnamon; Mr. J. Robson, open Crest and Crestbirds, Lizards, Mules, British, and Foreign Birds; and Mr. J. H. Scothern, selling classes, gift, and the members classes except Yorkshires. The other business was allowed to stand over for the secretary to make other arrangements and report it next meeting, which will be a summoned one on September 28th, when it is hoped all members will attend to allot special prizes, etc., to open classes.—W. H. RAMSEY, Hon. Sec.

COVENTRY O.S.

A much appreciated lecture was given by Mr. Eckersley on "Moulting and Colour Feeding the Norwich Plainhead," on September 11th. Mr. G. Peters, in the chair, said, on introducing Mr. Eckersley, that he believed he was as well qualified to speak on the subject as anyone. He was an enthusiast one might well copy. His winnings on the show bench had been consistent, and well borne out by the judges. Such success had only been achieved by the uttermost thought, care, and attention in all the many details pertaining to the Canary Fancy. On the proposition of Mr. F. W. Harris, seconded by Mr. Geo. Clarke, a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Eckersley for his lecture.—G. TURRELL, Hon. Sec.

GLASGOW AND W. OF S.

Meeting held in Good Templars' Hall on September 10th, Mr. Eastman, president, presiding. The Secretary intimated that the arrangements for the show, to be held on November 15th and 16th, were progressing satisfactorily, the patronage of the Scottish Plainhead Club, Border Fancy Club, Yorkshire C.C., and Scottish B.B. and M.C. having been secured. Three additional classes were added to the British section, viz., Uniod Greenfinch, any variety Bunting other than Yellowhammer, and Field Moulted Linnet. With such a classification and members working in harmony, the support of fanciers both sides of the border is fully anticipated. The meeting having decided to procure new staging, an estimate from Mr. M. Henderson was submitted, and as his terms were most favourable to the Society, that gentleman was entrusted with the contract.—J. BROWN, Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.C.

Meeting held September 15th, at the Spinners Hotel, Oldham, when a large number of members wended their way to it. Mr. Barker Clegg was voted to the chair, in the absence of Mr. John Garner, our worthy President. The large amount of business included show patronage, granted to the following shows:—Rochdale, October 18th and 19th; Manchester, October 25th and 26th; Nottingham, November 16th and 18th; Bristol F.A., December 4th and 5th (Lancashires only); L.C.B.A., December 6th and 7th (Lizards only); Crystal Palace, January 31, February 1, 3, and 4. Nottingham Show is to be made the Club Show, with Mr. Barker Clegg to judge the same, when eight classes for Lancashires and six for Lizards will be provided. It was decided to purchase two gold medals to be competed for at the above shows for novices only—a novice to be one that has never won two first prizes in open competition. The correct tint of enamel can now be got from the secretary for inSides of Lizard show cages in 6d. and 1s. tins—members 5d. and 10d. respectively.—H. OLIVER, Sec.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

An invitation was kindly given the members of above Society by Mr. C. Brown to visit Shirehampton for a ramble on Saturday last, when some of the most enthusiastic of the members availed themselves of the chance to visit that district, which abounds with wild bird life. The next time Host Brown invites us we may be able to make an earlier start on the ramble. Fancy taking us in to see his bird rooms, containing a hundred birds, and such birds. I should like to see a certain advertiser in CAGE BIRDS from this district meet us with a few entries at our coming show, when I can guarantee that if he wins he will win in good company with Friend Brown's team.—T. W. QUARMAN, Assistant Sec.

SCOTTISH B.B. AND M.C.

The above club paid the "lang toon" of Kirkcaldy a visit on September 7th. That well-known exhibitor of British Birds, Mr. L. J. Arrighi, was in the chair, and many of our principal exhibitors present, amongst the attenders being Messrs W. Mather, the popular Hybrid breeder; A. W. Watson, James Whiter, genial Tom Erskine from the West, Bald and Livingstone, and the veteran John Brown, beaming with smiles, with many other coming lights. Minutes adopted of general and committee meetings. Recommendations of Trophy Committee agreed upon, £1 2s. 6d. being intimated for the trophy fund; subscription sheets to be issued to our members, which the committee hope will meet a liberal response. There was a record application. The voting was lively, some of our prominent societies being left out by a narrow majority, the following shows being successful:—Dundee, Kilmarnock, Scottish National, City of Glasgow, Dysart, West of Scotland, Kirkcaldy, Broxburn, 63 medals being offered for our competitions. A large number of new fanciers are now being enrolled from the various districts. Full information from the secretary, R. FARMER, 11, South Elgin-street, Edinburgh.

CLYDEBANK.

Meeting held on September 7th, Mr. William Ross presiding. Communications were taken up, and satisfactorily dealt with. The following gentlemen have agreed to officiate as judges at the show on November 9th:—Messrs. W. Thornton, Edinburgh; D. Black, Govan; Jas. Watson, Glasgow; and W. Williamson, Renton. A report was given from the Visiting Committee, which showed about 156 young birds, which was considered very satisfactory. The Chairman complimented the members on their good attendanee

WOLSINGHAM.

The Wolsingham and Wear Valley Agricultural Society's show was held on September 11th. Mr. George Sweet judged. NORWICH: 1, 2, Stanger and Herdman, grand shape, nice bead, and meal, 2nd a yellow, loses in feather; 3, Rutherford and Bright, a nice Buff, good head, shape, and feather, not quite through moult; vhc, Todd. YORKS.: 1, Elliot, nicely drawn, like wax, an easy winner; 2, Rutherford and Bright, in nest feather, will be heard of again; 3, Stanger and Herdman, just a nice Yellow; res., Rutherford and Bright; A.O.V.: 1, Todd, fair, good crest, plenty of feather, an easy win; 2, Rutherford and Bright, nice cinnamon; 3, Stanger and Herdman, decent crest. BRITISH BIRD: 1, Cooper, grand Waxwing, well-known winner, needs no comment; 2, Bell, same place last year; 3, Nattrass, Goldfinch very dirty; res., Rutherford and Bright, a grand Linnet, nice pencilling, and bloom.

DESBOROUGH.

The Desborough Fanciers' Society held a show on September 16th. The total entries were 130, very satisfactory indeed for the time of year. Crests and Crestbreds were good, but the cage bird section generally is not a strong one in the Society, but it is growing. Mr. W. Hooper judged. CRESTS and CRESTBREDS (8): 1 and special, Morris, clear body dark Crest, splendid centre and droop; 2, 3, vhc, White, second green hen with lovely centre and droop, runs first very close, third green C.B., foul tail, very broad head, and browy, vhc heavy marked, good head, on a good body. A.O.V. CAN. NON-FED (8):1, Morris, good Norwich, nice head, splendid chest; 2, Morris, another nice Norwich, head rather narrow, lovely yellow, good body, wings just a bit crossed; 4, Terry, not quite so good as last named. BRITISH (2): 1 and 2, Morris, 1 Goldfinch, nice bird, bit of colour, 2 nice large Linnet. FOREIGN (3): 1, 2, 3, Marlow, Mannikin, splendid condition, 2 Zebra Finch, splendid condition, 3 Saffron Finch, shown in splendid form.

GLASGOW.

The show for young Mules and Hybrids of the Glasgow and Western Counties Norwich Mule and British Bird Club was held at 122, Ingram street, Glasgow, on September 14th. The genial president, Mr. Peter Pettigrew, presided over a fair attendance of members, ably assisted by Secretary Adam and Treasurer Malcolmson. There were a good few fanciers present. After business was over, the magnet of attraction was the four light Mules that were bred in one nest, a note of which appeared in CAGE BIRDS, but these were not the only ones on view, another member putting down three bred in one nest, also a Greenie Bullie by the same member. All present agreed that it was the best show of young light Mules for numbers and quality that ever was seen. Some very nice dark Mules were shown, notably a Yellow Siskin by Mr. T. Ferguson, that should do some winning after the moult. We were sorry to hear that Mr. Whiteford's birds were absent through illness, he having been successful in getting a good few Mules and Hybrids. Mr. Martin judged Light Mules and Hybrids, and Mr. Brownlie Dark Mules.

LIGHT MULES: 1, McFarlane, with a beauty of a Yellow, four-pointed, of good size, the admiration of all present, many thought should have got special for best bird in hall; 2, and spec., McFarlane, four-pointed Buff, equally as good as first, colour deciding; 3, and special, McFarlane, another four-pointed Yellow, not quite so hig as winner, but good enough to win at most shows; 4, Johnstone, three-pointed Yellow, marked both eyes and one wing, could have held its own with the other mark; hc, Johnstone, handsome five-pointed Buff; hc, Johnstone, light variegated, and a good one too. HYBRIDS: 1, and special, best bird in hall, Johnstone, Greenie Bullie, fair size, and good colour showing; 2, T. Ferguson, Twite-Siskin, good size, and nicely marked; 3, W. Connelly, Redpoll-Linnet, nice exhibit, and well shown. GOLDFINCH OR LINNET, DARK: 1, and 2, and special, Linnet Canaries, Yorkshire type, good length; 3, G. Lawson, Yellow Goldie; 4, F. Brannigan, Goldie, could do with more size; 5, W. Cassils, Buff, and a beauty, too. A.O.V., DARK: 1, T. Ferguson, with a rattling good Siskin, extra good size and colour, should do well; 2, F. Brannigan, nice Greenie; 3, special, T. Ferguson, Siskin; 4, special, F. McKenna, good Siskin Mule, loses only in size to winner; vhc, McKenna; hc, Connelly.

CLUB NOTICES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

QUAKERS THAT TALK.

Sir,—It was with much interest that I read "M.B.'s" note of his talented bird, but I can assure him that such cases are very uncommon. I read nearly all the popular literature that is published, as well as much that is purely scientific, and I cannot call to mind a single record of a talking Quaker, probably there have been such; certainly of the specimens I have had, they have never articulated a single word, but I have never kept them in cages; the male I possess, though in a largish enclosure, is very tame, takes food from the hand, when the door is opened and the arm thrust in. He makes noise enough,, but he does not talk. "M.B." must certainly be tolerant of noise, when he terms their yapping "singing"! I beg to thank him for his most interesting communication, for it will certainly help to popularise a beautiful, if somewhat noisy species. I am of the opinion that most species of Parrots and Parrakeets, would talk more or less, if sufficient pains were taken with them, but I also fear with some of the species it would need the patience of three or four "Jobs" before any result was achieved, and I fear the majority of the Quakers must be included among such a group. This communication should certainly induce the possessors of this really fine species, to keep them where they will hear plenty of conversation, and also try the constant repetition method as well. At the same time they must be a long-suffering household who could tolerate the continued presence of Mzopsittanus monachus in their midst. And in spite of this most interesting account, I fear the day is somewhat distant when talking Quakers will be common. Certainly I hope otherwise.

AVADAVATS BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY.

Sir,—Mr. Wesley Page and others may be interested to know that a pair of Avadavats have nested and successfully reared three fine youngstors in my outdoor aviary this year. The birds built a domed nest of dry grasses, warmly lined with feathers, in the outer portion of aviary, some time about the end of July, in a small privet bush, thick with undergrowth, about six inches from the ground. They laid four small white eggs, three of which, as stated, proved fertile. The young birds in their early stages up to about nineteen days old were fed by both parents, principally on insect food, which they caught in the thick wild growth of bushes, flowering plants and grasses of the outer portion (the ground area of which is about 100 square feet). I noticed that the male bird also fed the young on millet seed, rarely touching that which I had soaked for them. The three young ones left the nest on September 5th, this being the 18th or 19th day after hatching. On September 8th I noticed that the young birds could fly quite strongly and were very quick in their movements; on the 9th inst. I also noticed that they helped themselves to the drinking water. Since leaving the nest the male bird only has fed them, the hen having succumbed to the charms of an odd male in brilliant plumage. However, the male parent did not seem to mind much about this, his whole time being taken up in feeding and sitting with his youngsters. On Saturday the 14th, the young were feeding themselves and were practically independent of their parent. I should mention that after leaving the nest they returned to it again every evening and used it for sleeping quarters. The insect food caught by the old birds has been supplemented by live ants' eggs thrown in (with earth as well) by myself; I am fortunately able to get a plentiful supply. The young have black beaks and are without the white spots and red rump of adults, but in other respects they are very much like the female Avadavat. I do not consider that the birds have caused me any more trouble than the successful rearing of Zebra and Ribbon Finches in the same aviary; neither can I put any faith in the high temperature theory supposed to be so necessary for the successful breeding and rearing of these little birds, for the weather up to the beginning of September was the reverse of favourable. As the Avadavats nested out of doors, I well sheltered them with corrugated iron placed overhead, otherwise they would, I feel certain, have been drowned by the heavy rain we have experienced since the eggs were hatched. Last year, from the same parents, one fine youngster was reared to about nine days old, but died from the above cause. But having profited by this experience, I was careful to well shelter the present nest, and the result has been most gratifying.

E. Sprankling.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

THE SCOTCH FANCY CANARY MODEL.

Loose or Tight-feathered, which?

Sir,—Your correspondent "Piebald" is rusty on the subject, and has no good to say of the Committee, and he endeavours to add to his inadequate knowledge of the proceedings by asking questions. At this date it is unnecessary to answer them. I would recommend him to have a conversation with the Committee, and stop maligning that body. They did their work without fear or favour, and that is what annoyed the two opposers. "Piebald" did not require to admit his slight acquaintanceship—that was very patent from the tenor of his writings; he wrote for writing sake. The model by Mr. Robert Wright (who acted throughout in a most disinterested and gentlemanly manner) was far ahead of the others submitted. Therefore the Committee could not do otherwise than adopt it, and it will be recognised until a better is brought forward—which has not yet been done. "Piebald" wants a smoothly feathered bird. Well, the Committee have chosen a smooth feathered type. If your correspondent would like to see the type bred this year, let him visit the Derby Show in Glasgow on September 21st, and he will get an eye-opener. Breeders have been aiming at Mr. Wright's model, and advanced breeders have succeeded admirably. What a pity "Piebald" is so thoroughly engrossed in business that he will not be heard of again for some time. The busy fancier can generally do something to help others, but I am afraid "Piebald's" system of carping will do harm. Practical assistance is what all classes of fanciers want. We have a model for the Scotch Fancy Canary worthy of production in life, and if your correspondent wishes to come to the front at shows he must follow it. He is too spasmodic; it takes iron perseverance to make an impression in the fancy—even with a model.

Advocate for Model.

Sir,—I should be glad if "Piebald," or, anyone of those who seem to be damaging the breed to suit their own ends, would let me know through your valuable paper if the Scotch Fancy is to be judged for smooth feather or for points in the future, as I saw a few winning birds at a show a week or so ago that looked like little Germans, and heard several asking what breed they were. Although I have kept several Scotch Fancies of the right sort, I could hardly tell what they were, but for their tails being well in. Now I don't think anyone would have to ask that question if they saw a good one with a forward reach, head down, good shoulders, clean cut chest, nicely fitted wings, and that graceful turning of the head from side to side that makes one smile to see it—not as if they were going to sleep when they are handled. Well, if the above winners are to be the sort of smooth bird for the future, then give me the rough bird for Fancies.

SWEATING HENS.

Sir,—Some years back I gave my experience on sweating hens, and Mr. Cutmore has touched on the right point. There is no such thing as a sweating hen. It can easily be proved whether it is sweat, or not, by the following examination. When the young are three or four days old they have those little nobs like a little ball of down; in course of a day or two it disappears, that is the first sign of the sweating. Next you will find the hen looking clammy on the breast until she is completely stuck up all round, all the down has disappeared on the young ones, and the inside of the nest has become baked as though it was glued. This cannot be perspiration. Those that are unfortunate to have one of these so-called sweating hens can see for themselves what it is. When the down disappears from the young one's head you can take the nest out of the cage and watch the excreta. You will find it is similar to water. The hen tries to pick it up, but cannot, so she has to leave it on the side of the nest. The hen, finding it impossible to clean, after feeding, opens her feathers and settles down on the young, thus placing her feathers against the sides that are wet from the excreta. The hen then gets careless, because of the condition, and the young ones die. This, without doubt, is caused through not having proper food. Sugar, I found, would cause it, making the egg or cake too sweet. The best thing that I found out was a little grass that is full of seed, grown on waste ground. My birds will feed on this, and leave other green food to get it. I have used it so freely that the cage bottoms have been full, and the old birds have built their nest in it. Some of the Liverpool fanciers used to smile when they saw them with their nest on the cage bottom. It is rather difficult to explain, the grass I mean. But I will send a small parcel to any society's headquarters for their meeting night, so that fanciers can see it, if they send me 2d. for postage. The meeting night will be the best, as there will not be so many parcels to send as to separate fanciers.

REMEDY FOR EARWIGS.

Sir,—Our friend "Loughboro" is at a loss to know how to get rid of earwigs, with which he is, if I may term it, swarmed out. By adding one more to his stock of birds I can safely say that he will have no more trouble with anything of that kind. He says his aviary is 7 feet long, 7 feet high, and 4 feet wide, and about 12 inches off the ground. I have two aviaries, one built of stone, and one built of wood. I keep all my Canaries in the wood aviary, and all my British birds in the stone aviary, to which I have attached a fly, 14 feet long, 13 feet high, and 6 feet wide, so that if the birds wish to perch outside, they can. The fly is double netted, to guard against rats and cats. I have a green hedge and a bush for them to perch in, a soil bottom, a large trough for them to bathe in (will hold three buckets of water), and they enjoy it. Blackbirds and Thrushes I have, and a great many more of the smaller kind. I may say the hen Blackbird has moulted black and white. Amongst them is a Robin Redbreast. This has moulted a white tail, and mottled wings. He is a beauty, very tame, and always singing. Now this is the kind of bird that will free you of all earwigs. In Yorkshire, the Robin gets called a "Bobby." All you have to do is to catch one, and put him in with your Canaries, and Mr. Bobby will not only catch all such-like burglars, but will lock them up at the same time. Our friend says he cannot find any earwigs in the daytime. Mr. Bobby will, both soon and late. Just try it.

S. Clixby.

Sir,—I notice "Loughboro'" is being troubled by a plague of earwigs, for which he is in want of a remedy to rid them from his aviary. Well, I think if he tries the method that I mention below, he will greatly reduce numbers, and probably get rid of them altogether. Procure some sheets of newspaper, and roll, or crumble them into a ball with the hands, and lay these on the floor; also tie some on wires of flight, and anywhere, where they are known to crawl up. These act as traps for them, and then one can go round in the morning with a pail of hot water, into which the contents of paper can be shaken. Also try pieces of sacking laid on floor, into which the wigs are bound to crawl in the daytime, or some flower pots with a little hay put inside, and stand these on floor slightly raised from ground. I feel sure that "Loughboro" will rid his aviary, in time, of these pests.

SOUTHERN Y.C.C. PATRONAGE.

Sir,—I should esteem it a favour if you would allow me space to deny the authorship and to repudiate all knowledge of, or connection with the writers of certain anonymous letters upon the above subject. Having followed the subject with interest, I have naturally formed my own opinions as to the cause of Mr. J. B. Waterman's complaint, as I also have of those gentlemen who so obviously hold their anonymity far more precious than fame. But for the information and guidance of those who refuse to believe otherwise, I must repeat that the name that has served in the past, and will continue to serve is

H. E. Tringham.

Sir,—I am pleased to see both Mr. Crisp and Mr. Rennie publicly repudiate all responsibility for the letter signed "Frost and Snow," and kindly allow me to state that personally I never for one moment thought that either gentlemen wrote the epistle in question. Seeing, however, that the communication possessed an official flavour, inasmuch as some of the information it contained could have been derived from no other source than the private records of the Society, I did hope that the Southern Yorkshire Canary Club would have publicly disclaimed all responsibility in the matter.

A STRANGER AMONGST THE LINNETS.

Sir,—While out for a ramble this morning, I saw a strange bird flying amongst some Linnets in a whiney field. Although it seemed very tame, I could not get within twelve or fourteen yards of it. It seemed always to fly on to a weathered whin very few yards away. I may say in build and size it resembled the Waxwing, but it had no crest. Its colour (as far as I could see, as it was very sunny) breast down to the tail white, short tail, with about half of it black on the end, rest white, back something like the back of a Thrush, but a shade lighter, the head seemed to have a black cap. I thought it was a Flycatcher of some sort.

Anxious.

How swallows manage to teach the young fledglings to hawk for themselves is a mystery. If we watch an old blackbird on the lawn with her three or four chicks we notice that she breaks up a worm before them, plainly showing them how to do it for themselves, and no doubt by following this example many young birds manage to feed much earlier than they would if left entirely to themselves.

A LINNET WHICH RETURNED TO ITS CAGE.

Sir,—I read the account of my Linnet in your paper, and I wish to say he was let out last Sunday and returned. Friday being such a fine day, and the sun full on the hack, I let him out again, he first lit on the closet and seeing that he was in danger of cats, I roused him, he lit on the spout opposite, where he remained picking for some time. I next went out to throw some water at a cat on the wall, when I saw a bird fly, he must have been on the spout over his cage, and going upstairs, I saw him on a stack of chimneys about four houses further on. I next saw him on the seed box of his mate's cage, I had the bottom of a cage in my hand, and banging it on the ash-box he flew in a different direction, and I never saw nor heard him, and I had given him up this time, being gone one-and-a-half hours, and his mate being very quiet all the time. I had just been feeding my Thrush, when I heard the Linnet outside, singing hard, and the other Linnet lit on the window-sill, and went in his cage which is held by pulling the window down on the cage, the cage being too wide to rest on the window-sill. Should you tell a friend to call on me, I should be pleased to let the Linnet fly in his presence.

THE BREEDING SEASON AT DERBY.

Sir,—The breeding season of 1907 has not been a prolific one; in fact, very little better than last year. The Rev. S. Lawton Platt has done well with his Crests, and Messrs. R. Hodgkinson and Son have also met with success with Norwich. Most fanciers made a good start about Eastertide, but have done nothing much since, amongst them being: Messrs. J. H. Roe, J. Pegg, J. H. Drakeley, W. Stevens, F. Price, W. Bamsey, etc. Mr. Jos. Bexson has reared about 20, amongst them being two good Cinnamons. Good luck to them friend Joseph, for we know you like one of your old fancy, the "dun." Mule breeding also seems a failure in Derby, but Mr. F. Price has managed to rear a light one or two, one a six-pointed bird of some promise. The district members of the Derby Club seem to have done better than the fanciers in the county town. At Melbourne, the Yorkshire fanciers have done well, especially Mr. Geo. York, who have reared about fifty. But Messrs. H. Wall, Ernest Spencer, E. Cratchley, etc., although not rearing a great lot, have some birds of promise in size and quality. At Draycott, we hear, Messrs. John Towle and Son, and R. Barber have done well again with their Crests, etc.; in fact, they cannot do wrong. At Holbrook Moor, Mr. W. Brown has been fortunate enough to rear a few good Crests and Crestbreds, and by what I hear on good authority he has an eye-opener in a green Crest. It is said to be the best produced in the shire for some years.—Needless to say, Mr. Geo. Colledge, of Kilburn, I am pleased to see has a good 'un or two both in Crests and Crestbreds.—

SCOTTISH BRITISH BIRD AND MULE CLUB MEDALS.

Sir,—I beg to draw "A Member's" attention to the fact that the above club have not disallowed the Bathgate Society the medals twice in three years. Last year they were granted; but the previous year they did not ask at our meeting for the allocation of medals, owing to the blundering way they go about their business. Further, he states that there is not another society which offers a better classification. This is pure bluff. He again states he is at a loss to know why they have lost the medals. There was no judge appointed, and no statement made at our meeting, which helped greatly in the vote. Then he states the S.B.B.M.C. have granted medals to a non-existent society. How is it that Mr. J. Livingstone wrote the Secretary two days before the meeting, and brought the classification with him, along with the Broxburn Secretary's address? If the Society referred to is non-existent, the S.B.B.M.C. will lose nothing, and it will be clearly seen that our burly friend is at his old pranks again. Let him take care; he will play this game once too often, and hinder the progress of a good mining district show, which deserves every consideration. There is no prejudice against the Bathgate Society, only they must see in future that judges are appointed for their show. Let them take their defeat as gentlemen.

DO YOU WANT A BLOCK OF A BIRD?

We have had a series of small inch blocks prepared for the benefit of advertisers, dealers, secretaries, etc., and can now supply block of any variety at the ridiculous price of 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-, carriage paid. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements. They are taken from designs by the leading artists of the day.

THE THOUGHTS OF A VETERAN.

Canary Breeding from 1871 to 1907.

Sir,—It was in the year 1871 that I became the proud possessor of my first pair of canaries. I was then a youth of 15 years, living at home with my parents in Birmingham, were I was brought up and served my apprenticeship. This pair of birds was given to me by my uncle, who was a born lover of all kinds of bird and animal life, and for many years he bred a large stock of canaries. His style of breeding was to turn them loose in the room, and as it was from him that I received my first lessons in bird keeping, I naturally followed on the same lines as my teacher, and for the first five or six years I bred my birds in this way. The room was fitted up as follows:—It was in the top room of a three-story house where the birds were bred. The first thing to do, in breeding, is to make a square wooden frame to fit on the outside of the window, and cover this with fine wire netting so that the window can be opened for the birds to get plenty of fresh air. You must give this room a good cleaning, lime wash the walls, then go to some gardens and bring three or four old bushes, one of these should be nailed to the floor in the centre of the room, and one in each corner. In these bushes fix the nest baskets. White pottery was not known in my early days, we made a string net and filled this with moss, cowhair, feathers, and hay cut up in small pieces. This net should be hung on the wall in a light place, and from this the birds will help themselves. The seed is placed in a long wooden trough, and fitted along the bottom of the window. The water is put in a large, flat pan, or dish, and the birds can wash themselves at will. My first year in this room I purchased two more hens in addition to the pair my uncle gave me, and at the end of November these hens were turned in the room, but the cocks were not put in till the fourteenth of February, St. Valentine's Day, as the old fellows used to say that was the day when all birds found their mates. Now this, my first year, was the most successful one I have ever had from the same number of birds for I finished up with 31 young, and did not lose a bird. No bad feeders here. The bird would breed freely for five or six years. Will they do it now? Several of the young cocks I bred in those days lived to be eleven or twelve years of age, and one bird I gave to a friend was fourteen years old in the May that he died in the following October. Where has the stamina gone to? Now as time went on I wanted to go in for a better class of bird, a little Mule breeding, etc., so I was compelled to give up loose room breeding, and go in for a stock of cages. But, oh! the extra labour, the poor results, and the confounded plucking, a thing that was unknown to me in loose-room breeding. Although the system of loose breeding cannot be practised were two or three varieties are kept, it is a system that I can strongly recommend where the object is for song birds only. The Norwich canary was the first I took up as a special variety, not the rough monster of to-day, but a much smaller bird of fine quality and spritely habit, grand colour, and that natural. I bred a few very nice birds of this variety, and a few fine goldfinch and linnet-mules, until I got a situation in Liverpool in 1882. I was some time before I settled down in this town, but when I did make my home here I soon had a bird-room fitted up, and I thought I would go in for Crests, so I sent to Messrs. Mackley Bros., of Norwich, for a pair. In due course the birds arrived. The cock was a yellow variegated bird with a dark crest, the hen was a clear buff. The following spring I put this pair of birds up, the hen laid four eggs, and hatched four birds. Among these there was one clear yellow cock with a green crest, and at the end of the season, after he had gone through his moult, I thought I had never seen a bird so handsome in my life, he was a short cobby bird with a close fitting coat of feathers of lovely quality, his crest, although small, was beautifully formed, and the bird was of a lively habit, far different to the rough, partly blinded, sleepy creature of to-day. Crest men have undoubtedly improved the size of crest, but this has been done at the expense of every other good quality the bird at one time possessed. A few years later I took up my parents' favourite, the Yorkshire, the gentleman of the canary family. This bird I have bred for a good few years, and the improvement it has made is very marked, but I think the present day show-bird is quite large enough. I think if breeders would turn their attention a little more to natural colour it would be a step in the right direction. About eight years ago I took up the Yorkshire Green, there is no variety of canary that has made such rapid progress in such a short space of time, so far as type and general Yorkshire character is concerned, but I am sorry to say that this has been done at the expense of that old green colour, and dark markings that we once used to see. One word to the beginner. What ever variety you make up your mind to go in for, study that variety, and learn to tell a good one when you see him, and don't't be gulled with a pedigree as long as your leg. Remember it takes two good ones, to make a good one, and one ounce of real quality on the surface is worth a ton of hidden mystery.

THE C.B.U. & NON-UNION SHOWS.

Sir,—If your correspondent Mr. C. H. Cooper refers to the Crystal Palace, when he writes of the Great Glass House—kindly permit me to inform him that the Palace Cage Bird Show will be held under Cage Bird Union Rules and will be open to all, no matter whether they be members of the Union or not. The fixture is starred in my copies of Cage Birds. Perhaps Mr. Cooper has a copy containing a printer's error.

A LINNET'S LATE NEST.

Sir,—We have, in the nursery gardens, a Brown Linnet with three young ones in the nest, a week old to-day (September 16th). This is the latest date I have ever found any—the latest nest of last season flew on August 27th They are well fed, the only difference in the old birds' treatment of them being that the hen rarely leaves the nest at all, the cock bird doing all the feeding as yet. It would be interesting to know when the youngsters will moult. I should hardly think they will before next June.—Sydney L. Cocks.

EGGS IN SEPTEMBER.

Sir,—I wish to know through your valued paper if it is an uncommon thing to see an egg laid just now? I stopped breeding at end of July with my dark-striped hen Canary, and the male Canary has not been beside her since, nor has any other bird, she has been entirely alone. I was surprised when cleaning out cage to find an egg. I wonder if any other reader of your paper has had anything like this happen. D.E.P.

INTERNATIONAL CONTEST.

Scottish v. English Plainhead Clubs.

Sir,—As a member of the Plainhead Club I strongly protest against having the above contest held in Scotland this year, and quite agree with what Mr. F. S. Matthes says that the contest should take place this year in England, seeing the Scotchmen had the chance of holding it in Scotland last year, but failed to make use of the opportunity. I consider it very unsportsmanlike, and hard lines on Englishmen to ask the contest to take place in Scotland two years in succession, or rather kept out of England for two consecutive years. I think this arrangement has been rather prematurely made, besides being arranged to take place in connection with a show which has yet to make itself known. Hoping to hear what some of my fellow members have to say in this matter.

MR. D. H. TEDSTONE'S TESTIMONIAL.

Sir,—Kindly allow me to remind the members of the Welsh Cage Bird Club that I am now closing the subscription list for Mr. Tedstone's testimonial, therefore I ask all those members who have not yet subscribed, but intend doing so, to do so as early as possible, as the date fixed for closing is September 30th. Trusting that this will meet the sight of all members, as I am sure they only want reminding. The presentation will take place at one of our first Cage Bird Shows, which will be specified later on through the columns of Cage Birds.

AN IMPUDENT BURGLARY.

Sir,—On Friday afternoon last, while my house was left, it was entered by burglars, and besides several valuables, they took twenty-eight birds (Norwich and Yorkshires), and this loss I very much regret. The work seems to have been carried out by someone having a knowledge of birds, as they took all the best and about half the number I possess. Perchance some of your readers may hear of this number of birds being offered for disposal, and I shall be very grateful if they do, that they would communicate with me.—T. D. Morgan, 22, Burdett-road, Mile End, E.

A PLAGUE OF MICE.

Sir,—In reply to "Avalon," I strongly recommend cement walls. I was troubled with the same plague myself, and that is the only way I prevented the mice getting into my room. I found it paid me in the long run. I being in that line, could do it at a small cost. C. Lee.

BE SURE AND USE THE DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

Sir,—At the commencement of the coming show season, I would urge intending purchasers of birds for exhibition, when dealing with strangers, in all cases to insist on the deposit system. In Cage Birds last July an advertisement of Rare Birds appeared from a well known judge and writer in the Press. I sent deposit for one of the birds said to be a selected show specimen, but got a letter from the advertiser saying, on no account did he send birds on approval, but he would guarantee them to be as represented. I therefore let the matter drop and had my deposit returned. About three weeks afterwards I received a letter from him saying he still had the bird, and would send it on receipt of cash. Thinking the position the advertiser held in the Fancy, as an official of one of our British Bird Societies ought to ensure his straightforwardness, I sent him the money direct, but received nothing but a little puny hen, totally unfit for exhibition, and all attempts to get a letter of explanation from this gentleman have proved futile. Therefore I would urge all readers of this paper in dealing with strangers to insist on the deposit system.

The law of libel prevents us from publishing the name of the judge against whom Mr. Thomson brings his charge. Besides, on an ex parte statement, we cannot accept the case against him as proven. But the moral of his experience remains the same—always use the deposit system wherever possible.—Editor

NEW SOCIETY AT RAUNDS.

Sir,—We have started a Fanciers' Society at Raunds, to be known as the Raunds and District Fanciers' Society, with the Wheatsheaf as our club house. We have about thirty-six members already, which is very good for a start, but hope to have a lot more yet, as we have no limit to the distance. Any one wishing to join can get full particulars from myself, or by attending any of our monthly meetings, which are held the third Monday in each month at eight o'clock. I hope fanciers will give us their support, and help to make the Society a success.

THE CITY OF GLASGOW O.A.

Sir,—This Association has been far from happy in the selection of its Committee, the meetings which have been held having shown the reverse of that harmonious spirit which would have conduced to that healthy state of matters which the members so much desire. The situation has been relieved by resignations, and fresh committeemen will have to be appointed. I urge care in picking men who will work with might and main, and keep clear of the half-hearted. A resident in Edinburgh was put on the Committee; he has not attended a single meeting. At the time I thought it was pretty much a farce, a case of a man appearing in print, and keeping out some one who would have been of practical use to the Society. The executive will have to rouse themselves. Mr. McDonald has been working hard; he can do his work in A1. style, and fanciers should support him. The Edinburgh Committeeman could have canvassed the Eastern bird men for specials, and saved Mr. McDonald from writing letters to individual fanciers, as he has had to do. It must be a matter of satisfaction to the able Secretary to have many promises of special prizes. Every breeder cannot be a Secretary, but every breeder can help by becoming a member, entering exhibits, and if successful in breeding, contribute special prizes. Useful articles can be purchased for a moderate sum. Generally the men that earn a living income from their birds do not support shows in proportion to the support accorded by those who have had bad luck. Scope exists for revision of support, working of Committee, and suavity towards the general public. Utility and not ornamentality is wanted in the City Show.

BIRDS RETURNING TO CAPTIVITY.

Sir,—I have been interested with your recent letters on Chaffinches, also the one about the Linnet returning to its captivity again. I have two Chaffinches which I keep in an outdoor aviary, and on two occasions one of them has chanced to get out. The first time he stayed away two days, coming into the yard to feed. I left the door open the second day, and in he went. The second time he was caged on the third day, going into the aviary and singing away, as contented to all appearance as he could be. I also have a Bullfinch which got out, and after, flying about amongst the trees was back again in his cage in three hours. Do readers not think that was a sign that they were happy with their lot? I might say they have only been caged about twelve months. I may say I am very pleased with Cage Birds. I have got some very good birds from it.

NEWCASTLE BREEDING RESULTS.

Sir,—Messrs. Dobson and Son, Stargate, have had a record breeding season, rearing over 50 crests and crest breds, besides other kinds, and amongst them are many promising birds. A crested bred stood out from amongst the others when I saw them, and will make a clinker. Its nest head feather is over half an inch long, of good size and shape all over, and nice quality of feather. The crests were nearly all deep in the moult, but judging by the dense and well arranged pens on good heads they ought to give a good account of themselves. "Cud" believes in keeping feeders for the young, and uses plenty of green food, chiefly chickweed and lettuce, with hemp seed and the usual egg food, two tea biscuits to one egg, both white and yolk. He is a great believer in cleanliness, both of cages and feeding vessels, uses no artificial heat, but plenty of ventilation without draughts. Like many others, he does not use much rape seed while feeding young. Mr. Hutchinson, of Heaton, has some very nice young birds, but has been unfortunate in loosing two very fine crest-breds; he has a promising Crest and a Crest-bred, which is all there for substance and quality. He also has a few Mules, but I think Crests are his chief fancy. As far as the Newcastle Society goes, we would do badly without Mr. Hutchinson; he is the best man for getting specials for the show. I don't know how he does it, but as soon as they see him coming the special is waiting. He takes a real interest in the welfare of the Newcastle Society, and whether he wins a special for himself or not, he certainly wins them very often for the benefit of the show. Mr. Young, also of Heaton, has bred a good number of nice Norwich and Borders. He has his birds nicely arranged on shelves in an outhouse. The cages are mostly wired all round, and nests are fixed in a platform at one end. He is a great believer in milk sop for the young from the time they leave the parents until they are six weeks old; in fact, they get nothing else but that and chick-weed, the mouse eared variety, which he says does them no harm. It can be distinguished from the common chickweed by its darker colour and the mouse ear shape of the leaves, which are hairy. Mr. Scott, another Heaton fancier, likes Norwich better than anything else, and has a good eye for the right sort. He can hardly look at a good Norwich without wanting it, and though he has had a successful season, he says he will feel parting with any of them, and if he could manage it he would like a houseful. Mr. W. Curry has done well. He is noted for getting the greatest number of young from a given number of hens in the shortest time. He is a second mother to his young birds. After his day's work is over he lights the gas and goes round with egg food and a stick, filling all the young up. He just pushes the hen off, if she objects, and stirs up the young ones with his finger, to see if they are all right. And, as he remarked, "the hens get used to it, and don't mind a bit." He has bred some nice Norwich and a good Crest and Crest-bred, which will do well for him, I think. Mrs. Curry, who is also a fancier, is a good helper with the birds, which means a great deal to a man who is away nearly all the day. Mr. MacPartling has bred twenty Mules from Canary hens, paired to Twites, Greenfinches, Goldfinches, and Brown Linnets, and some very fine ones there are amongst them. He is a genuine bird lover, and keeps all kinds, from a Redpoll to a Raven. His stock is in an outhouse, with a large aviary adjoining. In the aviary are British breeding pairs, such as Twites, Redpolls, Chaffinches, Green and Brown Linnets, Bullfinches, also a few cock Thrushes. He has succeeded in getting two nests of Redpolls, the first lot doing for themselves. The hen Redpoll has done the feeding her self, but I am sorry to hear she has just died, and the young are at present being hand-reared. "Grip," the Raven, is an adept at catching a bit of cheese (to which he is very partial), thrown from the other end of the yard, though I heard of him indulging in Jackdaw, by way of a change, so he is now two birds in one. Sad to think about, but that is where Jack has gone. From a Yellow-hammer-Canary pair Mr. MacPartling had eggs which, strange to say, were marked strikingly like Yellowhammer's eggs, the thin scribbly pen-like lines were the same. Can the cock influence the markings on the hen's eggs? The pair seemed to go through all their duties, but the eggs did not hatch.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

A HOME-MADE EGG GLASS.

Sent by E. J. Potter, Landsdown House, Fullerton Road, Wandsworth.

An easily made substitute for egg drawers, for use with punched-bar doors, in which the door easily fits into the groove, will be found in the utensil shown in the sketch. The ordinary feeding glass, which is contained in nearly every breeder's room is used. The wire (16 gauge) is bent round the middle of the glass, and a drop of solder put on to fasten it or, if preferred, it can be twisted together. The wire is then bent as shown. This glass I have found answer just as well as egg drawers, and a dozen can be cheaply made in a very short space of time.—E. J. Potter.

get a piece of strong hoop iron, 3½ inches by 1¼ inches and square at both ends, and drive this into the sawgate. You will find you have a useful tool for scraping cage bottoms and perches.—Thos. Soar.

The Stolen Mat.

One day washing had been done, and among the articles, a few neatly-worked linen plate mats were put out in the garden to dry. But when the maid went in the evening to collect them, she noticed that one of the mats was missing. Months passed, and it was not found, and the thing ceased to be thought about. It disappeared in May. In September, when the apples were ripe, the maid was sent to gather them. When she mounted the ladder she saw an old nest in the tree, a blackbird's. When she looked in she saw the long looked for mat. It had been used by the birds as a lining laid with mud and hay.—Sent by Hannah Martin, age 13, Pleasant View, Dunton Green, Kent.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

*Thrush Visits Old Friends.

Our master had a hand reared thrush. It unfortunately escaped whilst being fed. After a while it came back, but though the cage was put outside, it would not go into it. Now it may be seen early in the morrings, and nearly all day on the housetop. It is the best singing thrush I have heard, and everybody seems to be talking about it. He sang all the winter indoors by gas-light as well as daylight.—James Maurice Hendey, Beaulieu School, New Forest.

*"As Like as Two Peas!"

The Tree Pipit and the Meadow Pipit are two birds which get confounded with each other. In the country they both go by the name of Titlark, and sometimes you may hear them called Ditch-larks, no distinction being made between the two species. The nests of these birds are built upon the ground, closely hidden by a large tuft of grass, the Tree Pipit building nearer to the hedge than the Meadow Pipit, and sometimes building in a wood. The nest of the Tree-Pipit is made of moss, grass, and roots, lined with fine grass, and a little hair. The eggs are four or five in number, and vary greatly, some being chocolate brown, others purple, and some dirty white with brownish blotches. I have in my collection two Tree-Pipit's eggs which are a bright pink colour not mixed with any other colour. The nest of the Meadow-Pipit is made of hay, and bents, and lined with hair, and contains from three to five eggs, three being the commonest number, of a dusky brown colour, not unlike some of the Tree-Pipit's eggs.—R. Burgess, age 15; 28, High Street, Congleton, Cheshire.

A Long-Lived Hybrid.

My father has in his bird-room a goldfinch canary hybird, which is 17 years old. It was bred by my grandfather, and given to my father when it was about six months old. It is now, through old age, quite blind with one eye, and can hardly see with the other. Since it moulted last time it has lost its bright plumage, and has turned to a dull grey. It hardly ever moves off the perch in front of the food pots, but it is perfectly healthy and sings every day. When anyone goes to feed the birds it will immediately go to its egg drawer to ascertain whether anything has been given it, and if anything has been given it will eat with much pleasure.—Ernest Tunmer, age 13; 10, Crown Lane, Maldon, Essex.

Ethel Tebay's father kept a Starling, a clever bird, who could talk a little, said his own name, "Jacob," and learned to sing like a thrush.

Sydney Fisher visited Bournemouth Cage Bird Show with his mother, and was so delighted that he wished to buy all the birds he saw there.

Sidney Woods sends a description of his Magpie, who is a handsome bird, but undoubtedly naughty, for "it gives you a sharp pinch, and will do everything it is not wanted to do."

Olive Jaques writes a charming account of her pet Canary, who was wonderfully tame and a beautiful singer. Unfortunately Olive has written on both sides of the paper. Harry Holloway, though only eight years old, is a quick-witted and resourceful boy. Seeing one of his father's Canaries had got caught between the wires of its cage, and was in danger of perishing, Harry promptly bent the wires apart, and the poor little bird was so glad to be released that it began to sing immediately.

The Breeding Season and Its Results.

By W. EVINS.

A Paper read before the Exeter and District Cage Bird Society on September 3rd.

The subject of my paper, "The Breeding Season and its Results," is one that will take us back over the past season's work, and by carefully weighing things up, we should find out wherein lay our success, or failure, as the case may be.

Generally, it has been a bad season for most fanciers, but, of course, we always hear of some individuals doing well. I think the last winter was a very trying one, and no doubt it upset a lot of birds which were not thoroughly robust, and others took longer than usual coming into breeding condition. I have heard of many instances of hens not laying a single egg throughout the season.

AN EXCEPTIONAL SPRING.

March, April, May and June were exceptionally cold months, and, without doubt, were responsible for a lot of unfertile eggs, also for fertile ones not hatching, etc.

The coldness of the season had one good effect, it kept down the red mite, at least, that was my experience. For the first two rounds, I hardly saw a single one, consequently the chicks were reared in comfort. When the hot weather came in July, the red mite began to get a hold, and special attention was needed to keep them under. After the long spell of cold, the hot weather drove the old birds into an early moult, and many a nest of young birds had to go, because the parents were unable to stand the strain of the moult and successfully bring up their broods.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES.

I will now proceed to give you the result of our own breeding operations. As some of you are aware, my brother and self have each a small back room for our birds. We live in the same road, in houses exactly opposite each other, so one is a south room, and the other a north room. In the south room our breeding pairs were Crested cocks and Crested bred hens, and the north room, Crested bred cocks and Crested hens.

We started with seven cocks and nine hens in each room. We do not keep a cock specially for each hen, but work them about, as the hens come on to nest, although we had six pairs that were not parted the whole season. These did valuable work as feeders. We have some hens that will bring up their chicks unaided, but I am certain it is much easier, and more natural to rear young Canaries with the help of a good feeding cock. Well gentlemen, of our eighteen hens, one died after laying her first egg, another died while sitting on her second nest of eggs. Of the remaining sixteen, two did not lay a single egg, although apparently they were in good health, and one of them (an eighteen months old hen), was one that did well as a young bird. So out of our eighteen hens we only had fourteen that were really breeding. Now altogether we had 177 eggs laid. Of these 130 were fertile, we hatched 98, and to date, we have 54 living, and pretty safe now, and getting nearly through moult.

OUR CAGES.

It may be of interest to some of our younger members, if I give you our method of feeding, and the construction of our rooms. Around the sides, from the floor up, we have movable wire fronts fixed to form a flight 32 inches high, and 15in. out from the wall. These we have found very useful for stacking away our young birds. Above the flights, we have three rows of breeding cages. Now, we believe in double breeders, with a sliding division in the middle, and movable wire fronts. Each cage stands on two iron brackets. By adopting this plan we do away with shelves, which are always a harbour and a snug breeding place for the red mite. We use earthenware nest pans, hung on wire brackets, with swansdown linings, and have found them satisfactory in every way. For nesting material we use dried moss and grass, with the addition of a little brown wool to finish off with. We usually give the young birds a clean nest when about three days old, and another when they are ten days.

NO SAND TRAYS.

For the bottoms of our cages we use rough pine sawdust, and find it smells sweeter than sand in the hot weather. We do not advocate sand trays, they being very hard to remove should any grit get into the corners of the cage. Besides, what is easier than to remove the contents of the bottom with a piece of bent hoop iron on to a dust pan? Grit we give in a tin placed inside the cages, our mixture consisting of sea sand, ground egg shell, and broken pieces of cuttlefish bone mixed together.

OUR SYSTEM OF FEEDING.

Now with regard to our mode of feeding. We believe in everything being plain. After the moult, the diet is plain canary seed, with the addition of half-a-teaspoonful of mixed seed per bird, twice a week. This consists of hemp, rape, linseed, and a little inga. About a week before we pair up we give a leaf of dandelion daily to each bird, also a teaspoonful of egg-food. When the old birds have young, we give them egg, mixed with thin lunch biscuits, three or four to one egg. As much hemp as they will consume, and boiled rape seed, a teaspoonful every other day. Watercress we use for greenfood, giving it fresh three times a day.

Some hens are a long time making up their minds as to whether they shall feed the chicks or no. These we try to entice with any little tit-bit we can think of. We usually have a look in the nests the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night. If we find any young birds with their crops empty, we give them a feed of egg-food, moistened in our mouth, off a small pointed piece of wood. By adopting this plan we are certain we have saved many a young bird that would otherwise have died of starvation.

GOOD MOTHERS.

We find no great difficulty in getting the majority of our hens to feed after they commence.

Young hens with their first nest we are very careful of, and do not disturb them any more than we can help. I think, usually, if a hen feeds her first nest, she will continue to be a good feeder as long as she remains in good health.

Hens are sometimes accused of being bad feeders, when really, it is the fault of the chicks not opening their beaks, through being weakly. One of our best Crested hens has fed up ten young ones, all her own chicks. Two of them were first prize winners at our Nest Feather Shows. I may say she had the help of the cock, who is a splendid feeder.

The most I have hatched from one hen is fourteen, she laid two nests of five and one of six. Her third nest of five chicks she let die through being overtaken with the moult. Of course, we do not get such good results from every hen. If such was the case birds would be too common and not worth breeding.

HEAT OR NO HEAT!

Coming to the great question of heated bird-rooms, I am strongly against using anything in the way of artificial heat, considering it unnecessary, and not beneficial to the health of our birds. Last winter, my room went down so low as 27 degrees, 5 degrees below freezing point, and, of course, the water in the drinkers was frozen into solid ice. But all through the birds remained in good health, and I can claim to have been fairly successful in breeding a fair number of birds.

SNEEZING AND COUGHING.

I think birds are more apt to catch colds in heated rooms than in cold ones. Say the outside atmosphere is 20 degrees below a heated room, draughts will get in somehow. Every time the door is opened a cold current of air is bound to enter, and must affect the birds. The only year we used heat, the majority of our birds were sneezing and coughing all the winter. I have never known a healthy bird die of cold, although it may finish off the weak ones, and better so, for weak, diseased birds are of no use to any fancier.

Wild Plants for Cage Birds.

Weeds and Seeds of the Field and Wayside described.

By R. MORSE.

With Footnotes, etc., by G. E. Weston.

Erratum.—In last week's instalment, by a printer's error, the scientific name of the Broad-leaved Dock was wrongly attached to the Black Knapweed—the former is R. obtusifolius and the later Centaurea nigra.

NOTES.

Groundsel is almost too well-known and widely used to need comment from me. Every person with even just a pet Canary seems to recognise it as something "Dickie" will devour with relish, and which will "do him good." I prefer to gather it from poor ground; on good soil it attains a somewhat rank growth, and from such I seldom take more than the seeding heads—no leaves, unless tiny ones. At all times I strip off leaves of very large growth—coarse and stringy. It is particularly useful with Goldfinches, being one of the few green foods they will eat at all freely. Available over a long period during the year, groundsel is a good friend to the bird-keeper, and young, not too rank growths can always be given with safety:—G.E.W.

The Knapweeds, or hardheads—also variously known as hardines, horse-nops (or nobs), ironheads, etc.—are again a great help to the keeper of the fascinating Goldfinch. It is safe to say there is nothing he likes better; and a daily feed for fresh-caught specimens is of inestimable value in "seeding them off." Hardheads are also well liked by most other British seed-eaters, and a supply of heads filled with ripe seed (frequently also with valuable grubs or "maggots") is easily gathered and stored for use. A handful or two thrown in the aviary will meet with a warm welcome, and Canaries are not backward in appreciation. For Hybrids and Mules they are great, finding them, like thistles, both food and wholesome occupation:—G.E.W.

Anent teazle I have little to say that has not already been said under thistles and hardheads. I always gather a few heads when I drop across any, but as good, well ripened seed can always be obtained from the seed merchants, I never go out of my way to get them. The heads are generally very tough, and the seed difficult for many birds to get at, consequently they usually require breaking open. Teazle is a seed I use a lot of, believing it to be of great value (probably with "corrective" qualities) given with stimulating, oily seeds, such as hemp, niger, linseed, etc.:—G.E.W.

Meadowsweet (Spiraea ulmaria).

During the months of June, July, and August many of our ditches and damp waste lands are almost covered with the creamy-white flowers of that charming plant, "The Queen of the Meadows," otherwise Meadowsweet. The latter name is very appropriate, as the flowers are beautifully fragrant, although some think the scent is rather sickly.

Meadow-Sweet.
Leaf and Flowering Head.

It is a tall plant, about three to four feet high, with leaves which bear a slight resemblance to those of the rose. (This might be termed a "family likeness," as they are both members of the same family — Natural Order, Rosaceæ). The flowers are very densely crowded, and therefore, now most of them have fallen off, large quantities of seeds may be gathered with ease, and added for future use to those already stored up.

The meadowsweet is another of the many plants which were once used largely by country-folk as medicine.

It is an interesting fact that although the "Queen of the Meadows" has such a strong, sweet odour, the flowers do not contain any "honey" whatsoever, but are visited by bees probably simply for their "pollen." From this the substance called "bee-bread" is manufactured by the bees.

Meadow-Sweet is a plant on the seeds of which I have often observed various seed-eating birds hard at work when in a state of nature. Bullfinches, in common with others of their family, are partial to it when ripe. It is very plentiful at the present time, and the other week I saw a few Greypates hovering around a patch:—G.E.W.

Watercress (Nasturtium officinale).

Watercress is so well known that a description seems quite unnecessary. Nevertheless, when one goes to gather it wild, one frequently finds it almost hopelessly entangled with other ditch plants, from which some would-be gatherers may be unable to distinguish it. Many a time the wrong plant has been gathered, and even eaten, without the difference being noticed. I will, therefore, give very brief descriptions first of watercress and then of two plants which are probably most commonly mistaken for it.

Watercress, then, has what are known as "compound" leaves; that is, each leaf is made up of several leaflets. The leaflets themselves have wavy edges, and there may be from seven to thirteen of them on one main leaf stalk. The stems of the plant are solid, and the flowers are white.

The most similar of the two other plants is the Procumbent Marsh-wort (Apium nodiflorum). This is not a well-known name, but, nevertheless, the plant is exceedingly abundant in most ditches and small rivers. The leaves of this plant are likewise compound, but there are not so many separate leaflets on one leaf stalk. Moreover, each leaflet has a decidedly "serrate" (i.e., toothed like a saw) edge. The stems, again, are quite different from those of the Watercress, being hollow instead of solid. The flowers are of the same colour (i.e. white), but are much smaller, and the flower stalks radiate from one common centre, thus forming what is botanically called an "umbel."

The other plant which resembles Watercress to the inexperienced is Brooklime (Veronica beccabunga). This may be at once distinguished from the other two plants mentioned above by its "simple" (i.e., one only on each leaf stalk) leaves, which are placed opposite to one another all up the stems. The flowers are also quite different, being bright blue in colour and in opposite "racemes" (a raceme is a cluster in which the stalk of each flower is of equal length).

It is hoped that by the above three descriptions no difficulty will be found in identifying the wholesome Watercress. The leaves of this plant form a well-known and very useful salad, and are valuable as a "green-food" for many birds, as they possess beneficial properties.

Watercress is another of the favourite "green meats" of the bird-keeper—doubtless owing a good deal of its popularity to the ease with which it may be bought. There is an element of danger in its use should it happen to be gathered from water contaminated with sewage or other deleterious matter. I know many fanciers who habitually wash it in strong salt water before use, and one or two in a weak solution of Condy's fluid; afterwards rinsing in clean water and allowing it to dry, or dabbing it in a cloth. Whether either method is a safeguard, I am not prepared to put on record. Personally I do not use much watercress, though I never hesitate to give a few young tender sprays at any time, should I think fit. It should never be given in a frosted condition during winter the "old hands" say (this applies to all green foods):—G.E.W.

Gold of Pleasure (Camelina sativa).

This plant, although well-known in cultivation, is not by any means common in a wild state, and whenever found thus in this country is an escape from cultivation. It is grown chiefly for the oil contained in its seeds, and these are also fairly extensively used as a food for cage birds.

Gold of Pleasure is a plant with tall, slender stems. The leaves which grow upon them are "auricled"; that is, they have ear-like appendages at the bases, which partly wrap round the stem. (Compare with the illustration, also the description and illustration of Shepherd's Purse on page 143). The flowers of this plant are of a yellow colour, and are quite small. The seed-pods are somewhat egg-shaped, and may be found in their prime during late summer, as the plant's blooming season is in June and July.

Gold of Pleasure.

It belongs to the "Cabbage Family of plants" (Cruciferæ), which family also includes Charlock, Watercress, Shepherd's Purse, etc. (Notes concerning same will be found under Charlock on page 143.) Also refer to the illustration of the flower given there, which is a typical example of the flowers of the Crucifers.

Blackberries.

No attempt will be made here to deal with the common blackberry in a botanical way. A complete volume could easily be filled by dealing with the very numerous species. It is sufficient for the present purpose to note a few facts which will apply to Blackberries as a whole, leaving botanical science strictly alone.

The common Blackberry, or Bramble, is a much later plant than the Dewberry (described on page 143). The fruits differ slightly in several ways from those of its near relative, but their properties are similar. It is a very useful astringent fruit, and, therefore, like the Dewberry, a valuable remedy for diarrhœa.

When describing the Dewberry I mentioned that the fruits had the appearance of being covered with dew. This is quite absent in the case of the Blackberry. And whereas the former usually grows in ditches, or on low banks, the latter is generally found high up in the hedges, the stems hanging on to the shrubs surrounding them by means of their very numerous prickles.

Gold of pleasure has a high reputation with many fanciers. I have heard it rated above shepherd's purse for the purpose of moulting Linnets, and, from my point of view, no praise could be higher. The bird-keeper will have to grow his own supply, however. It is very uncommon in a wild state—one may search a county and never drop across it. Of course the seed (like teazle, thistle, etc.) can be bought from most seed-men. Gold of pleasure constitutes one of the "secrets" of some old hands at Canary breeding and exhibiting. They say its use tightens and glosses the plumage. It is also used to "force" hen Canaries into breeding condition, for which purpose I have heard it held to be very efficacious, though its excessive employment is said to affect the stomach of the bird and the character of its excreta. Certainly it is, whatever else it may be, a very oily seed, and one requiring judicious use—seeds of this character (like others of the "cabbage family," turnip, winter rape, radish, cabbage, etc., said, by-the-bye, to contain considerable sulphur) are not easy of digestion. I am afraid, however, I am running past my space:—G.E.W.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

September Music.

The bird music of the month is confined to the Linnet and Robin. The Greenbird will utter a few piping notes, and the Skylark a silvery twitter, but only the Linnet, of the field birds, sings his lay of the early summer. The song is sweet and somewhat plaintive, as though in sorrow for the departing sunshine. It sounds delightful along the fruit laden hedgerows. The singers are not isolated specimens, but birds that have for a time strayed from the flock, alighting upon some convenient branch, and being alone, have burst into song.

The big flocks are full of music. When disturbed they rise with musical twitters beautiful to hear, but the height of the performance is reached when the whole gathering, of perhaps a hundred birds, burst into song. It is the most extraordinary musical outburst that one can possibly imagine; there is nothing in bird land to equal it. No individual performance of the most finished songster can give one half the pleasure and delight of this song storm.

In the flock I saw many times the birds had risen from the stubble, wheeled into the air, and settled again, or alighted upon the berry laden hedgerow, with an incessant twitter that in its uniformity of sound, was almost monotonous. But once when they rose there was more noise than usual, the jerking calls were louder and more prolonged; they settled along the hedgerow, and instantly came the bird song of the whole flock. The cause of this would be hard to define; possibly something away in the field had startled them, some real or imaginary danger, and the song then rendered might have been one of joy, defiance, or emulation.

Only once previously do I remember hearing this united chorus of the Linnets. It was just before sundown, when the golden rays of the setting orb lit up the stubble-like spikes of gold. The partridges were packing in the adjoining meadow and every sound was distinctly heard in the still air. The song came from the hedgerow, and although I listened until it was nearly dark, it was not repeated.

The Robin Redbreast is the other songster of the month. He commenced in August and will alternately cheer and sadden us right away to the Spring. The songsters are mostly birds of the year, for they will sometimes commence before the speckled plummage has all disappeared. They are evidently plentiful this autumn, for half a dozen singers can be heard round the buildings.

The Trumpeter Swan.

The Trumpeter Swan is a bird with a remarkable voice. It is used while on the wing, and the sound comes clear and metallic from high in the air. This note is produced from a wonderful windpipe, which curves about in a shape almost resembling a horn. Its relative the Mute Swan has no curve to the windpipe, and others only slightly so.

The Lordly Heron.

The Herons have increased upon the marshes and the foreshore by the sea. Although a solitary bird, one may occasionally see two or three together sitting upon the top of the sea wall, quietly digesting a hearty meal of fish. Although a big eater, the Heron never appears to put on flesh and become fat, as other birds do. Why this is so, one can hardly surmise, for other fish-eating birds are generally fat and oily. The Heron is quite a figure in the landscape, and when seen in the quiet autumn evening slowly flapping across the dreary marshes, his huge form seen dimly against the grey sky or distant woods, he is just the touch of life required to complete the picture of dreary waste and solitude.

A Hand-reared Kestrel.

I heard of a curious case recently respecting a young Kestrel that had been hand-reared. The owner was tired of his pet, and decided to give it its liberty. At first the bird refused to go, but upon being pressed to do so, flew straight away, evidently with difficulty. The owner was very much surprised later on to have his Hawk returned to him by a boy, who stated he had seen it fly straight against a high wall. It was kept for a day and released again, this time flying direct into a person's face. The bird had evidently not lost the power of flight, but appeared to be unable to steer itself. No doubt, if allowed its liberty for a few days it would get over this, but it is more than probable he would be destroyed before he could properly navigate the air. When it is intended to release such birds they should be allowed to fly for some days in a large aviary, or other building, and be released in a wood or in the open country.

THE ONLY ART

in bird catching is to get proper appliances to work with. Given these, and it is just as simple as it looks. Every appliance sold by me is guaranteed to be made by men who are not only practical makers, but experienced bird catchers as well, and neither time nor money is spared to make them the most up-to-date, reliable, and durable on the market. To prove this to your own satisfaction, I only ask you to have anything I sell on approval and compare it with a similar thing from any other advertiser, and if mine is not far better value at a less price, return it to me, and tell your friends that my articles are useless. For months and months last season I publicly asked any dissatisfied purchaser to smash up anything he had had from me, and I would return him the whole of his money, but not one article was smashed up, nor was I ever asked to refund a penny. This fact alone speaks volumes for the quality of my goods. Clap nets made from genuine ¾inch mesh thread, 3 yards long, 4/- pair, 4 yards 5/-, 5 yards 6/-, 6 yards 7/-, 7 yards 8/-, 8 yards 9/-, 9 yards 10/-, 10 yards 11/- pair, all fly 4 feet, and are actually 5 feet deep, in order to allow plenty of "kill." All clap nets have two nets to the pair, and are properly geared all round and fitted complete with pure hemp lines, beech pegs, birch stave poles, and everything ready for immediate work. Any size clap net made to order. Sparrow nets fitted on 19 feet poles, 6/6 pair. Spring net traps, 24 inches long, 1/- each, 18 inches long, 9d. each. These net traps are by far the largest on the market, are entirely self-acting, will catch and hold uninjured, any bird from a Wren to a Rook, and are so simple, a child can set them. Single trap cages 6d. each, six 2/6, twelve 4/6; double ditto, 10d. and 1/- each, 7/6 and 8/6 dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each, 11/- dozen. Patent self-setting and self-acting trap cages, work automatically, 1/6 each; round or square topped call cages, 3d. each, 2/6 dozen; loose netting, genuine thread, ¾inch mesh, 7 feet deep, 3d. yard, 9 feet deep, 4d. yard, 12 feet deep, 5d. yard, all post free. This netting is exceedingly fine, but very strong, made specially for bird netting, and must not be confused with the thick American cotton netting being sold as bird netting. Real Japanese bird lime, absolutely the strongest made, and only lime to stand all weathers, guaranteed to hold a Rook or Hawk, ¼lb. 6d., ½lb. 10d., 1lb. 1/6; sample box 3d., all post free. Pure hemp pull lines, 64 yards long, 1/4 each, post free. Full list of all catchers' appliances and sample of netting one, stamp. Goldfinch or Linnet cages, 4/6, 5/- and 5/6 dozen; Lark cages 3/6, 4/-, 4/6 and 6/6 dozen; Redpoll cages, 2/6 dozen. All wire Canary cages 3/6 and 4/6 each. All brass drawing-room cages with ruby glass, 5/-, 6/-, 6/6, 7/6 and 10/- each. Parrot cages from 4/- to 20/- each. Every description of cage in stock. Dealers please send stamp for full printed list. Following few testimonials go to show value sent out. "7, Winbolt-st., Stockport, Sept. 6th.—Sir,—The netting I got from you some months' ago is best I ever used, please repeat the order, viz: 36 yards of 12 feet for clap nets, Yours, A. Pennor" "Near Elm Tree, Blisworth, Sept. 10th.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. lime, it is best I ever used, Yours, J. Harris." "Greenhill Gunislake.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. bird lime, which I find out is better than I can get off anyone else, Yours, W. Phillips." "6, Berkeley Terace, Southall.—Sir,—Please send following netting. I can say that the netting I had from you far excelled all my imaginations, being far superior to that of Messrs. . . .. Yours, J. Crockford." "Claremont Place, Larkhall.—Sir,—Please send another pound of bird lime. I never lost a bird with the last pound I had from you, it is real good stuff, Yours, G. Alexander." "Harrow, Middlesex.—Sir,—Thanks for netting to hand, which is very satisfactory. I shall hear you in mind in future. Yours, C. Steeles." Remember everything sent on aproval, cash or deposit system, and money refunded in full if every satisfaction not given. By dealing with me you not only save money, but you get appliances with which you can catch birds, not frighten them away. See British Bird Column.

HARRY ALLEN,

Champion of all Champions. Patronised by all the leading contest singers and exhibitors. I have supplied birds to gentlemen who have won cups and other prizes both at contests and on the show bench, besides winning open to all England contests at Bradford, Batley, Morley, Leeds, and other places too numerous to mention. This record goes to show that I keep nothing but the very best. The Linnet is a speciality of mine, so before buying elsewhere try one of mine, and you will never regret it. Big, fine, healthy cock Linnets, stand well and very tame, 1/- each; extra picked birds, real beauties, well pencilled, 1/6 each; cock Linnets, picked specially for singing in singing cage, with a packet of my Special Mixture, and instructions how to feed, 3/- the lot; real bargains. Having sat judge at thousands of contests this last 20 years, I can highly recommend these birds to any gentleman. They can be heard pouring out some of my champion's wonderful notes. All contest singers should try one or two of them. I have put 20 at one side for myself. House-moulted Linnets, just through the moult, singing hard, and ready for contests, 10/6 each. Acknowledged prize winners, 15/6 and £1 each; will sing with their wings down at anything, and impossible to get tamer birds. I have a few Redpolls as large as Linnets, real beauties, very tame, and sure singers, 1/- each. No rubbish; every bird has my personal attention before sent out. Four packets of my Special Mixture, 1/-. If you want your birds to sing at one another with their wings down, send P.O. 1/6 for my Book of Secrets. I have my birds singing at empty cages daylight or gaslight; to prove it please pay me a visit. 40, Stanley-rd., Ton Pentre.—Sir,—Bird arrived safe; it gives me good satisfaction. C. Dinnet to H. Allen. Copper's-row, Armadale.—Sir,—I am very highly pleased with the bird I, and so is all my friends. E. Burton to H. Allen. 14, Mill-lane, Southport.—Sir,—Birds arrived safe; I am very well satisfied with them. I shall recommend you all my friends who want a good bird. Will give you another order later. Thanking you for your honesty and straightforward dealing. H. Bridge to H. Allen. Anyone visiting Leeds on Tuesdays and Saturdays should call in the Leeds Bird Market and see my stall. I have a grand assortment of Bird Medicines and Foods, etc. All my birds are on seven days' approval; cash or deposit. Beware of worthless imitations. Thanking you all for patronage.—Harry Allen, 42, Brown Hill-crescent, Harehills, Leeds.

ALL BIRDS AND CAGES

I send out on approval, entirely at my own risk; if not give you satisfaction, all you have to do is to send them back. I'll replace it or refund your money in full. THE GREAT POINT about my method of dealing is that I don't merely ask you to take my word. I want you to see my birds and satisfy yourself that you are getting exactly what you want, and for this reason I send all on approval, entirely at my own risk, either cash or "Cage Birds" deposit system, and despite the many assertions to the contrary, I claim to be the originator of approval system in connection with wild birds. Splendid large Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and condition, 1/6 each, three 4/-; six, 6/6; twelve 12/-; specially selected large birds for exhibition or muling and warranted in song, 2/- each; three 5/-; six, 8/6; twelve, 16/-; few clean moulted cocks in full colour and superb condition, 3/- each; hen Goldfinches, 1/- each, three 2/6; grand large red-breasted cock Linnets in pink of health, 9d. each; three, 1/6; six, 2/6; twelve, 4/-; few specially selected cocks for show in song, 1/- each; three, 2/6; six, 4/-. Please note every Linnet sent out is guaranteed red-breasted, thus proving that you get all cocks for your money; these Linnets are same sort as supplied by me to contest singers throughout England, so why not buy first-handed and save extortionate profits:—Cock Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/-; six, 1/6; specially selected yellow cocks for show, 1/- each; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; Redpolls, three 1/3; six 2/-; grand cock Skylarks, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; cock Bullfinches, 1/6 and 2/- each; hen Bullfinches, 1/- each; two year old cock Linnet Mule, 7/6; two year old Siskin Mule, 7/6; young cock Linnet Mules 5/- each; see following few testimonials:—"Park House, The Green, Ealing. Sept. 6th.—Miss Gilpin received Linnet quite safe, and is well pleased with it." "22, Smith's Terrace, Mitcham, Sept. 14.—Sir,—Goldfinches arrived quite safe and am well pleased with them, and will send other orders shortly.—Yours, F. Tulty." "282, Portland Avenue, Langwith.—Sir,—Please send me a Goldfinch; a friend of mine told me what good birds you always send out.—Yours, J. Cutts." "22 Wilne Street, Leicester. — Sir,—Please send me selected Goldfinch. I had one from you earlier in the year, and was very pleased indeed with it.—Yours, W. Riley." "151, Penyrheolgerrig, Merthyr Tydvil.—Sir,—Please send the following. I have bought birds from you before, and always found them as advertised. — Yours, Howell Williams." "Simpson, near Bletchley.—Sir,—Please send the following. The Goldfinch I had last year turned out well.—Yours, E. Hollier." "50, Gossage Street, Widnes.—Sir,—The two Larks arrived safe, and give every satisfaction.—Yours, T. Oldfield." Hundreds of similar testimonials open to inspection any time. Please note all birds are guaranteed properly netted in County of Worcester, and are not lime caught Irish birds palmed off as Worcestershire caught birds. One trial will convince the most sceptical that my birds are exactly as represented. For cages, etc., see appliance column.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some idea useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

No. 139.
PERCH FOR BIRDS AFFECTED WITH "TWIST."

Sent by J. S. Chadwick, Waterloo House, Lawton Street, Congleton.

I herewith forward you sketch of perch which I have used with great success during the past season for wild birds (especially Goldfinches and Linnets) affected with "Twist" or "Turn i' th' yed," as it is termed in certain Northern districts. Procure a piece of very thin brass tubing, ¾-in. in diameter, and about ¾-in. less in length than your inside box cage measurement, front to back. Then make a perfectly round and smooth perch, ¼-in. less in thickness than the bore of the tubing. After removing all other perches, place this one through the tub, and fix it at about the centre of the cage, but not too high up. You will find when the bird flies on to this, and throws its head back, it loses its balance, and has to flutter to the floor of the cage. It soon learns, however, that it must keep its body in a natural position when on the perch. As the brass tube is not unsightly, and can easily be cleaned, it may be kept in the cage until a permanent cure has been effected, generally from two to four weeks. —J. S. CHADWICK....

A "Loose" Perch.

LONG EATON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held September 21st. Mr. Hay in the chair. The principal business was to make further arrangement for the forthcoming Members' Show, which is to be held on November 30th. Mr. Lowe has been engaged by the society to judge; it was agreed that there should be 24 classes, consisting of Canaries, Mules, and British, with prize money, specials, and extra specials for the best bird in the show. The president, Mr. G. Smith, has given a Cup for the best yellow crest bred, reared by the owner. Three more new members were added to the society, which is growing larger every meeting night. This is the result of Mr. Oliver Clack's work; he is the greatest fighting man we have for the members of this society, and he still hopes to get 12 more at the next meeting night. Our assistant chairman, Mr. Hay, gave us a lecture on "Crested Cripples," and other Diseases, to which Birds are subjected." He is a gentleman with eight years' experience, and great study, and he hopes to give the members more information in the future. Our enjoyable meeting was brought to a close with a hearty vote of thanks to our assistant chairman for his lecture.—W. HALLAM.

SALE OPEN O.S.

Meeting held September 23rd. Mr Alf. Wellings gave a washing exhibition before a good attendance of members, explaining, as he went along, each point very carefully, so that the merest tyro could understand why the bird was put through its separate operations. A large number of questions were asked, which were willingly answered by Mr. Wellings. During the evening four birds went through the order of the bath, and it was surprising how soon they were dry after leaving the hands of the demonstrator. Mr. Wellings also brought to the meeting a bunch of flowering grass, which can be gathered on any waste land; this he explained to the meeting, he always used as green food throughout the year in preference to anything else. He had never had a hen which refused to feed her young when she had a supply of this grass. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Wellings for his very able demonstration, and the valuable advice he gave to the meeting. It was decided to hold our first annual dinner (tickets 2s.) on Dec. 7th. The show schedule for Nov. 9th was finally passed. Mr. Peter Barnes, of Northwich, was proposed as a member. Shall be pleased to hear from any other intending member before the show.—GEO. F. HARDCASTLE, Sec.

THE SHOWS.

NEWMILNS.

Newmilns show was held in the Merton Hall, on Saturday last, the 21st September. The most excellent Committee at the head of affairs was: President Mr. Wm. McGeachie; vice, Mr. Wm. Connell, Senr.; Treasurer, Mr. Alex. Crerer; Secretary, Mr. R. McDowall; Committee, Messrs. J. S. Muir, A. Mair, T. Alston, Wm. Connell, Junr., J. Aron, H. Mitchell, F. McDowall, R. Mair R. Ralston, J. Dykes, J. Roxburgh, J. Morton, J. Brown, Pollock, J. Muir, and J. Scott. The Scotch Fancy section claims our special interest. In point of numbers, the entries were in excess of last year, and the quality of the exhibits was, although so early in the season, of a high order. There was a creditable turnout in several cases, not a few of the birds staged were not quite through the moult, but quite a number were in the pink of condition, having got through an early moult, and were staged to perfection. Secretary McDowall, and members of Committee, including McDowall, Junr., who ably assisted his father, had everything in apple-pie order, and the birds well-arranged. The Merton Hall is well adapted for a show, plenty of space, free of draught, and an abundance of light, which was fully taken advantage of. The judges had ample room to perform their difficult task; there was no undue crowding, thus allowing visitors to view the exhibits to full advantage. There was a large turnout of visitors, the show being well patronised, especially by the ladies. Buff cocks made a most excellent class, there being some grand birds of size and substance. Dark and Foul hens were also strong, some really fine birds being here. In the Borders, buff cocks and hens were well represented, some birds of outstanding merit being shown. The classes for Goldfinches and Linnets were also well forward. Mr. R. Findlay had some good birds staged. This popular fancier seems to have recovered from his serious loss in the early part of the season, and we are glad to see him at the front again. Mr. Findlay carried off a goodly share of winning cards. Mr. Wm. McGeachie was fortunate in securing the card for the best young bird belonging to a member. It is a perfect model, and is sure to be heard of again. The judges for Scotch were: Messrs. Jas. Watson, Glasgow, and Wm. Summers, Strathaven. Border, Fancy, Norwich and British: Mr. James Smillie, Riccarton. The judges' awards were well received, and seemed to give general satisfaction, there being no "growlers" heard. The day for weather conditions was all that could be desired, and everything went very smoothly. The Secretary and his able assistants being well satisfied at what proved to be a most successful show, an ample reward for the hard work bestowed upon it. The prize money has been paid.

Some Interesting Experiences Detailed.

AN OFF-CHANCE CROSS.

A pair which are together on the off-chance, with a young fancier is a Twite and hen Bullie, both are and have been quite friendly with each other, the Bullie has built a nest and laid three eggs, and is now sitting very close on them in a small cage. I can hardly think they have paired. Time will prove that. I know of another one with a cock Goldfinch and hen Twite. These have been together since they were caught last Autumn. They have made no signs, neither do I think that they are likely to do so. Another pair together in this district is made up of a Redpoll and a hen Bullie. This, I think is the only pair about here. They have had two nests of eggs, the first was clear, now she is sitting on four more eggs; time will prove if they are good, or not. I have heard that one who has got the cock Canary up with the hen Chaffinch has got four eggs, and she is sitting on them well. The owner quite believes he has seen them pair on more than one occasion; he may be mistaken, but I hope that such is not the case, for he is a young beginner. The cross has never been obtained as yet. Generally speaking, it is tried the other way about, using the Canary hen and depending upon the cock Chaffinch.

AN AMOROUS CHAFFINCH.

I have one myself, which is up with a hen Linnet, singing all day long, and continually trying to get to its next door neighbour—a hen Canary. If I had got a spare hen Canary or two, I should certainly try him, as he seems so anxious. The Bramble-Bullie, which I have, is now going on, I hope, all right, she is sitting on four eggs in a very nice nest she has made of pieces of tow and cocoa-nut matting. The nest is nearly a work of art for a cage Bullie. I hope the nest is not the best part about it. I cannot say that I have ever seen them pair, although I have spent hours watching them. I have during June and July been up at 5 a.m., and often at 4 a.m. watching my birds, and trying to save the eggs. Although I have been so anxious, watching and waiting, I have often on leaving the room for a few minutes returned to find the hens have been off the nests, and the eggs broken at the cage bottom. I must have lost in this way, this season, over 20 eggs. So much for being over anxious. This year, I think I have had the "hump" more so than all the years during which I have tried these crosses. I find you can always learn something by being with your birds. I have kept a "log" of each morning's observations, and on just running through the pages, I find that all the eggs which the Hybrids have laid have been laid between 7 and 8 a.m., until this year I was not certain of this point. I thought that the wild birds, when at large laid before 6 a.m. I have found them many a time to do so, but under cage treatment it is not so. Perhaps some one may be able to correct me, but I don't think that there are many up at 5 a.m., and sit and wait until their birds lay. I dare say I should not do it, only I cannot sleep, and am in such bad health, that this small pleasure with the birds helps to relieve the mind, and causes it to work by thinking out various problems.

WATCHING AND BUILDING.

It is most interesting seeing the working of the birds in the building of their nests, and their destroying them all in a few hours. They work hard for an hour or so, and then all at once, from some cause or other, destroy them, then they will restart and build again. How many times they do it during the day I could not say, but one pair I saw make and destroy three well-made nests. Now after all is said and done this was well worth knowing, so I have not had all my labour in vain. I also noticed with the Canaries I have, but it was not the hen which caused the damage, but the cock; in the British birds it was always the hen. I suppose the nests were not made to her liking. One hen built and destroyed three nests, and at last laid in a cocoa-nut husk, with no building material at all. I may state that I always have two nests in a wooden box for them to build in if they are so disposed, and one lined with a piece of an old felt hat. This lining I much prefer to any other, as they cannot get their claws in it, and it is easily taken out and cleaned, one piece will last the whole season. Many of your readers have used this lining, if they have not, I must strongly advise them to do so. At the same time, I know that each fancier has his own ideas on the subject. I at one time used the material which the harness makers use for the inside of horses collars, but when in correspondence with the late Dr. Bradburn, he suggested the old felt hat to me, and I found that his suggestion was very good, and have used it ever since. This was long before he wrote his well-known book on British birds.

YELLOW BUNTINGS AND CANARIES.

I know now where there are two cock Yellowhammers up with hen Canaries; these are both in the hands of novices, and only put together on the off-chance; they are both in small box-cages, both of them have eggs, but I doubt if they will prove to be any good. If this cross should be got, I shall be very pleased, and will note it in a future paper. Both the Yellow-hammers are very steady birds, and have been caged-moulted. They were very wild at first, and my friend thought he would try his hand in taming. He did so by cutting the flights of both wings in one bird, and in the other, one wing only. The results have proved that he did steady them. This was done soon after they were caught; both have since moulted, and are new good birds. This friend, who has a good many pairs up, all of which are out of doors, in cages, has got a pair of Skylarks to breed in a large aviary. Both of these birds were caught last year, the hen is now sitting on some eggs; whether they will prove to be good, time will tell. He has great hopes of getting some, and pays them every attention with all kinds of insect food. The cock bird is a grand songster, and can be heard from early morning to night. This bird, no doubt, is helped on by a Thrush which can be heard a long way off, and is the great envy of all the neighbours, some say it is a great nuisance, as it wakes them up so early. I do know that one bird helps another to sing, when you have a good singer. I know where a friend, who is trying his amateurish hand with a cock Nightingale and hen Blackcap. They are in a good large cage outside; they have not made any sign to mate or build, neither do I expect they will.

NOT SMALL STUFF.

Now for another cross of the large kind. A friend, who used to have some Golden Pheasants, lost the lot except one hen, which is now getting aged, and the best or worst of it. It has since the last moult got male plumage. As I have not kept Pheasants of any kind, I cannot say much about them. He has mated it with a farmyard Rooster. She used to lay well, but since she has assumed the male plumage, she has refused to lay at all. This Rooster was only put with her to try and get her to lay; one of her young hens was mated two years ago with a Fowl, and a grand cock (shall I say Mule?) was raised. I have not seen it, but a relation of mine has it, and thinks no end of it. Some may say what is this to do with Mule and Hybrid breeding? Still, these facts are worth recording. If this should catch the eye of Mr. Finn, perhaps he might have something to say re Phoasant hen taking the male plumage. I think myself, but am not certain, after they take that plumage, they cease to breed. This same friend, who is a local naturalist, and keeps all kinds of birds, little owls (of which he has thirty), Long-eared Owls, Jackdaws, Magpies, and Crows, and many kinds of small birds. He has a nice lot of young wild Ducks which he has raised from eggs under a hen. He intends trying to cross the wild Duck with the Ronen, both ways. This will be done in a large pen; what luck he will have I may record next year, if alive. Why I mentioned this is, because it will show your readers how anxious fanciers are to try any experiment in crossing, which is, no doubt, due to the number of fanciers' papers now in existence, and to CAGE BIRDS in particular. These papers, are only as yet in their infancy, what will be the results in a few years' time? We shall have to wait to see, but if this craze for Hybrid and Mule breeding continues, we may expect to see something, for out of all the experiments surely some will come off, if only by accident. Many a good Mule and Hybrid has been bred by chance or accident in the past, and I daresay will be in the future. That old saying comes in well with this hobby. "Nothing venture, nothing have."

MY AVIARIES AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

By J. A. THILL.

From this description of the Mannamead Aviaries, fanciers will see that I am a strong advocate of plenty of room and light if one wishes to make canary breeding a success, and also a paying hobby. Most of us are not blessed with too much cash and are glad to turn an honest penny by making this hobby not only self-supporting, but even to add a few pounds to a slender income; this I am glad to say has been my experience.

MY FIRST SEASON.

The first year I bought three common canaries, two hens and one cock. From their progeny I made a nett profit of 25s. The following year, I bought a few pairs of crests and crest-breds, and two pair of Norwich plainheads; with both I had good results, but I realised the force of the proverb, "grasp all, lose all." I found that I was undertaking too much to be able to follow up my luck, so I sold out the Norwich plainheads, and now my ambition is not to be satisfied until I am with the foremost crestbreeders in the Fancy. Goaded on by success I went in for the crested variety in good earnest. Profiting by the golden opportunity that presented itself, through the lamented death of Mr. W. Harris, the most successful crestbreeder that year of the W.C.O.S. I bought his stock en block. Later on, I set to work and had my aviaries remodelled.

LIGHT AND SUNSHINE.

I have two rooms adjoining, the front one 15ft. by 14ft., having the sun up to 11 a.m., the other room 15ft. by 16ft., with sun from 4 p.m. To increase the light and sunshine, I have had a large window added to the front room so that nearly the whole of the front is glazed, giving me sunshine up to past 2 p.m. To let the second room also profit by the new addition of light and sun I have had a large doorway cut between the two rooms. Those fanciers who have seen the rooms consider them the finest aviaries in the town. Each room has a large flight A measuring 15ft. by 3ft. by 18ins. wide; B 15ft. by 2ft. 8ins. by 2ft wide. Above each flight are two rows of breeders, C measuring 20ins. by 18ins. by 14 ins., and D 15ins. by 17ins. by 13ins.

Over the breeders are the moulting cages. The breeding cages are arranged after my own design. The fronts are movable and divided off by moveable sides, so that when not required for breeding the partitions are withdrawn and the cages make good flights. I can recommend this style of cage, not only for the double purpose of breeders and flights combined, but by all the parts being so easily removed they cannot harbour red mite, and are cleaned in half the time of ordinary cages.

A GENEROUS FEEDER.

With regard to feeding, I do not approve of keeping the birds on low diet during the winter months, I have always fed well and have no cause to regret it. When buying in fresh blood I consider it most necessary to buy early, the birds have to get acclimatized to their new habitat, and treatment, etc., for every fancier has his own method of feeding and managing his birds; I attribute the failure of many first nests to birds being bought in too near breeding time. In conclusion, let me advise all fanciers who wish to be "up-to-date" not to neglect to read their weekly CAGE BIRDS; personally I have derived great help from it, there is always something new to learn in it, both for young and old fanciers.

MY EXPERIENCES WITH THE YORKSHIRE CANARY.

By R. P. BROOME.

A Lecture delivered before the members of the Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S.

BRAIN POWER AND CASH.

One has not to be a University graduate, or have the purse of a rich man to be a successful breeder of exhibition birds. At the same time, brain power and money have a great influence. As I have previously mentioned, if a man has not average ability in sizing up his stock each year, no amount of application will make him a successful breeder, successful he may be in point of numbers, but in quality and exhibition qualifications a different tale will be told.

IDEAS ON TRAINING.

I have refrained in writing these few lines from touching on what I may term the generalities of the variety. These have been so thrashed out and debated upon that no doubt it would be thought presumption on my part in giving view to any of my own ideas; seeing my actual practical experience has been somewhat short. At the same time, it is not always the fancier who has been at it the longest who can produce the best results. I will, however, just touch upon one point before finally drawing to a close. It is, perhaps, one of the most vital, and that is what is commonly known as training the young birds. I, like most of my fellow fanciers when they started, was under the impression that it was most essential to train Yorkshires. I use the word in the strictest sense. A true-bred Yorkshire does not want training; it wants steadying. Do not waste your time in buying training cages. Of course, there are some birds that are naturally nervous, but if you keep pegging away at these you will in time overcome their natural nervousness. The novice is often nervous and worried about this. I know I was myself, but if the birds are well steadied their natural breed and position will do all that is required in the way of standing properly whilst being judged. If a bird has not the natural qualifications, no amount of training will make him a winner. This is where the advantage comes in of not having too large a number of pairs up, so that when the youngsters come along, each one can have a little individual attention, as until they have moulted, young Yorkshires are very deceptive. Here again the man who specialises on the one variety has the pull. He can devote his spare time in training the youngsters, and he will want it all, I can assure you, to get his birds under command. The steadier the bird the more readily it can be disposed of, as a wild bird cannot show itself off so well.

RUNNING THE YOUNGSTERS.

My plan is, when the young are three weeks old, to take them from the parents, whether they pluck or not, put them in a Yorkshire show cage, and hang this on the front until four weeks old. I then transfer the nest of young to a single breeding cage, still hanging the show cage on, and I then each morning run the birds separately into the show cage. I can easily see which is the wildest; then, if there is one very wild, I place him in the show cage by himself, and every time I go in the bird room handle him. Sometimes I may have four or five of these wild ones at the same time. With these I place the show cages side by side on a table or ledge, and place a piece of cardboard between the cages. This is the only training they get. If a bird is tractable and fairly tame I do not trouble to do this. One thing one must bear in mind. They must be stuck to. Do not let them master you. Do not, like a good many novices, when handling the bird, hold the show cage close to the face. Think of one of your children having something strange suddenly brought before its gaze at close range. The tendency is to frighten the child at once. If you see a good judge, he does not hold the bird close up to his nose, except he may require a little close inspection if he thinks too much frill has been washed out. As a rule I have noticed novices take a bird up and bring it close up to their face. This is a mistake, and especially with young birds; hold them at arm's length, and then, if you want a close inspection, draw them gradually nearer. Time, I see, is passing quickly, and trusting I have not wearied you, and wishing you all success, I draw my paper to a close.

Habits, Structure, and Colouration of Birds.

By J. W. CUTMORE (Taxidermist to the Liverpool Museum).

A Lecture delivered before the Manchester and Northern Counties Ornithological Society.

Passing from the mud builders, we come to some which use vegetable substances, such as the Bottle Tit; the Wren also builds a domed nest, adapting it to its surroundings. In the Magpie, with its domed nest of sticks, we have yet another mud builder. This bird loads its nest with clay, and, as though conscious that his own thieving habits may be imitated by his neighbours, surrounds its nest with a hedge of thorns.

THE SOCIAL GROUP.

The social birds mentioned in our list are entirely African, they build their nests together in large batches, for protective purposes; they are very interesting little Sparrow-like Grosbeaks. Among the parasitic birds, we must place the Cuckoo first, although not forgetting that the common Sparrowhawk is in the habit of usurping the nest of the Crow. The Kestrel, also, is in the habit of laying its eggs in the nests of other birds, and the Starling frequently drives out the Woodpecker and Pigeon. The Cuckoo stands first for his cleverness in deception; firstly, observe his plumage, how like a Sparrowhawk, this in itself is a great boon to him, being naturally a weak bird, he is credited for strength. The habits of this bird are so wonderful that a book could be written about his doings; he is naturally a coward. The eggs of the Cuckoo are found chiefly in the nests of much smaller birds, such as Pipits, Hedge Accentors, and Robins, etc. In colour it resembles those of the birds imposed upon, and is small for so large a bird; it is not laid in the nest in the ordinary manner, but first laid upon the ground, then lifted into the nest by the beak, and while this is going on the rightful owners of the nest may be enticed away, mobbing the male Cuckoo, imagining him to be the dreaded Sparrowhawk. When the young Cuckoo is hatched by its foster-parents, it at once clears the nest of anything else that feels warm, making short work of any other young birds that may be present.

THE BRANCHERS.

Among the branch builders we have some common birds that build a nest that can vie in point of beauty and delicacy with any nest made by birds of other lands.

The Chaffinch's nest is decorated with lichen, and lined with vegetable down from the willow blossom. The Goldfinch is very neat, also the Linnet, Redpoll, and others. The Bullfinch builds a loose nest of fine roots and sticks, but the Dove's nest is the most simple, and usually deserving of the name of nest. The open meshes of the nest allow the wind to blow freely round the young birds. With most birds the droppings are removed by the parents, but with the Dove they are allowed to remain, when they rapidly fill up all the spaces between the sticks, making it a solid platform. The Sedge and Reed Warblers make deep nests, so the wind, in bending the reeds, do not upset the nest and tip out the eggs. The Reed Warbler also fixes its nest loosely between four or five stems of the reeds, and if by chance there is a rise of water, the nest is also carried up out of danger. There are birds that build no nest, yet such birds as the Curlew and Nightjar choose the exact spot year after year to deposit their eggs.

BY ARTIFICIAL MEANS.

Ostriches make no nest, but drop their eggs into holes scraped in the sand, the males sitting on them at night, but by day they are covered with sand, the sun carrying on the duty of incubation. The Australian Megapodes scratch up big mounds of decaying vegetation, lay their eggs in it, and leave them to hatch by the warmth engendered. The young are fully fledged when hatched, and they at once scratch their way out of the mound, and take care of themselves. But the most curious nest of all is that of the Edible Swallow, or Swift. This edible nest is found in China, where they fetch as much as 60s. per lb. for making soup. These nests are formed from the salivary glands, which seem to play an important part with other birds in moistening and gluing twigs and grass together in nest building. Spider webs are used by the Chaffinch, Longtailed Tit and others for the same purpose. These edible nests are found fixed to the walls of caverns. I have only one more nest to show you, it is constructed of leaves and grass, among leaves and grass at the bottom of a hedge, the eggs are the same colour as the dead leaves, also the bird itself. Taken altogether, a perfect example of colour protection is the Nightingale.

HARMONIOUS SURROUNDINGS.

So far as nests of the smaller and more defenceless birds are concerned, we may lay it down as an almost universal rule that if they are not carefully concealed they are made of materials that harmonise closely in colour with the tints of their surrounding objects, or, if conspicuous, are placed in situations difficult of access. In these matters birds display an unusual amount of intelligence, but we must admit on rare occasions an apparent utter want of it, which is certainly very remarkable. The Blackbird's nest is, as a rule, pretty well concealed amongst foliage, often in evergreens, but we have found nests of this bird built on bare walls. The Thrush (Throstle) is generally well hidden in thick hedges, but two years ago I found one in the middle of a field in a hole in the ground, with cattle grazing all round it. The Chaffinch nest, with its lichen-covered surface, is difficult to find. It generally harmonises completely with its surroundings.

COLOURATION OF EGGS.

Colour also is the means by which eggs are shielded from the prying eyes of enemies; many eggs, as everyone knows, are remarkable for their rich colouration; most of those found in open nests, or on the bare ground are coloured, marked and spotted in an infinite variety of ways. These markings serve the important purpose of concealing the eggs. This protective, or assimilative colouration is peculiar and intricate; for instance, the eggs of the Ring Plover and Tern are both sand-coloured, and found on the same stretch of coast, but the Plovers are minutely speckled, and found on the fine sand, those of the Tern are richly spotted and blotched, and are laid amongst the coarser shingle. Gull's eggs resemble the drift and shingle among which they are found. The Grouse eggs are well adapted to colour of the heather-strewn ground. The Lapwings for the moor and fallow; Pheasant and Partridge for the dead grass in which they nest, and only those who have taken a round with the gamekeeper in search of Pheasants' eggs, can appreciate to the fullest their protective colouration. The Larks and Pipits also resemble the ground and surroundings.

The beautiful blue, or greenish-blue eggs of the Song Thrush, Hedge accentor seems at first sight especially calculated to attract attention, but it is very doubtful whether they are really so conspicuous when seen in evergreens, gorse, or surrounded by the delicate tints of spring vegetation.

ORIGINALLY WHITE.

All eggs were originally white (they are composed mainly of carbonate of lime), they were like the eggs of Lizards, Crocodiles, Turtles, and snakes, and we might therefore expect that this colour would continue where its presence had no disadvantages we find that all birds that lay their eggs in concealed places, whether in holes, or in covered nests, the eggs are either pure white or uniform in colour. Ducks and Grebes lay white eggs in open nests, but have the habit of covering them when leaving the nest.

The eggs from Hybrids are not exactly like the eggs of the race or species of the female, but more or less resemble also the eggs of the race or species to which the male belongs, some observations from Mule breeders would be interesting.

WHY THE FEMALE IS PLAIN.

The female bird is generally plain and dull in colour, this is to harmonise with the surroundings when sitting. When both sexes are brilliant, the nest is such as to conceal the sitting bird; but when the male is brightly coloured, and the female sits exposed on the nest, she is always less brilliant, and generally of quite a sober and protective hue. It must be understood that the mode of nesting has influenced the colour, not that the colour has determined the mode of nesting.

On a rough estimate there are about 1,200 species of birds in the class of showy males and females, with concealed nidification, while there are probably about the same number in the class of showy males and dull females with open nests. Birds of prey do not require special protection, and thus colour protective quality is rarely found among them.

GAILY DRESSED LADIES.

There are a few very curious cases in which the female is actually more brilliant than the male, and which have open nests, such as are the Dotterels and several species of Phalarope, an Australian Creeper, and others, but in every one of these cases the habits of the birds regarding the sitting is reversed. The male sits on the eggs while the female is the stronger and more pugnacious. This curious case, therefore, quite accords with the general law of colouration.

DOUBTFUL BRITISHERS.

In conclusion, I will discuss with you some of those birds that have caused much discussion of late in the Fancy papers. The Nutcracker is one of the doubtfuls. It occasionally invades Western Europe, it is fond of the Scandinavian and Black Forest pines, and the Alps, and as a rule not given to wandering. Very few have visited this country. Another of these very doubtfuls is the Little Bunting from North Russia; one only has been taken in this country. Another is the Brandts Meadow Bunting from Siberia; again, one only taken here. The Rustic Bunting, also from Siberia; three or four of these have been taken in this country. The Black-headed Bunting from Italy, Greece, and Turkey, has occurred three times here. These certainly ought not to be exhibited as Britishers; if exhibited they should have a special class called "Doubtfuls." We might almost add the Lapland Bunting to this list, it has occurred about fifty times in Great Britain. The Ortolan Bunting, the Waxwing, and Shore Lark would be better classed under the same heading. The original Meadow Bunting from the Banks of the Rhine cannot even claim a place in this list, because there is not an authentic record that it has ever visited this country, otherwise than in a cage. There is a report that one was caught at Dover in January, 1857, which, no doubt, is quite sufficient for the consciences of some exhibitors.

A Typical Winning Goldfinch. Shown by Mr. A. T. Jupe.

Wheatear in London.

Writing to the Times from Lord's Cricket Ground, Mr. F. E. Lacey says that on August 29 he saw a female Wheatear on the ground within twenty yards of the wickets, while the umpires were in position waiting for play to begin. A pair of these beautiful stony-waste-loving migrants visited the grounds in April, 1905, but Mr. Lacey adds that he has never seen one there before at this time of the year.

Bird Life in London.

Canon Horsley, the rector of St. Peter's, Walworth, is an enthusiastic ornithologist, and even in the crowded locality in which he dwells he finds it possible to pursue his studies. In Walworth, the only open space for observation is a disused churchyard adjoining the rectory, and it is here that the canon has observed many interesting varieties of feathered visitors. "Sparrows," he said, "of course preponderate, but in the early morning, before the traffic begins, the observer can see Starlings, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and occasionally the Tom-tit. "One of the most interesting things connected with bird life in London is the wonderful way in which the Wood Pigeon has invaded the parks during the last few years. In some cases they become as tame as Sparrows, and this summer a pair of these birds built a nest in a tree only three feet from my bedroom window, and reared two young ones. The Heron has also visited the neighbourhood, and if it were not for mischievous boys and wandering cats, birds in Walworth would be more numerous than they are."

A Note on the Oyster Catcher.

Oyster Catcher is rather a curious name for a bird, especially when one knows that he never catches oysters; but he eats many kinds of shell-fish, which may have something to do with it. Another common name for the bird is Sea-Pie—this he gets from his black and white plumage, and his habit of frequenting the seashore. They are very interesting birds to watch, as one is able to get fairly close to them, and they have an inquisitive way of poking about round the stones, etc., along the shore, searching for dainty morsels.

The Fulness of Song.

During the season I have noticed many instances of birds singing at unusual times and places. Many people think the Skylark only sings while upon the wing, but this is an error. In the early spring all male birds are full of vigour and song, and it is no uncommon sight to hear and see the Lark singing while perched upon a fence. I have seen him do it while on top of a hop pole, on a telegraph wire, and upon the top of a thick hedge. A tuneful Blackbird has been observed carolling when upon the ground, also upon the wing, and it is no uncommon thing to hear the tiny Wren sing when flying from bush to bush. The graceful Meadow Pipit will also pipe upon the wing, when perched, or upon the ground. The fulness of song in wild birds at the opening of the season, when they apparently sing because they must, reminds me of the lines of the poet,

"I do but sing because I must,
And pipe but as the Linnet sings."

NORTHERN (LATE BORDER COUNTIES) BRITISH BIRD, MULE AND F.B.C.

Meeting of fanciers at Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms, Clayton-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on September 21st, to consider the reconstruction of this club. Mr. J. R. Slack occupied the chair. It was agreed that in future the club be called The Northern B.B., M., and F.B. Club, with headquarters at Newcastle. The old rules were revised. The following officers for the ensuing year were duly elected, President, Mr. J. T. Porteous; Vice-President, Mr. W. J. Taylor, Secretary, Mr. J. R. Slack; Treasurer, Mr. J. Bertram; Chairman of Committee, Mr. J. Shepherd; Committee (in addition to above officers), Messrs. J. Maddison, McKenzie, A. Storey, and W. Curry, with power to add to their number. The meeting was adjourned until Wednesday, 2nd October, at Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms, 65, Grainger-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, at 7 p.m., to which all interested fanciers are cordially invited.—J. T. PORTEOUS.

TWITTERINGS.

Mr. M. Berthet (formerly of Balham) has returned to France.

Eastbourne F. and F. Society hold their Second Open Show on November 20th and 21st.

Mr. Anthony Hay, the well-known Border enthusiast, will shortly pay a visit to the Great City of Smoke and Sin.

We have had prepared a beautiful set of framed, washable coloured plates. We are selling these at 1s. 3d., post free.

Mr. Sydney L. Cocks has removed to 3, Huntly Grove, Peterborough, to which address all communications should be sent.

The idea of the "Poultry World" has been welcomed by all readers of CAGE BIRDS who take an interest in the domestic fowl.

The Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. have been granted the support and patronage of the Crested Canary Club for their forthcoming show.

Mr. WATSON, secretary of Selkirk Show, writes:—"Would you put a line in CAGE BIRDS, saying that Class 19a, should read Mule or Hybrid, any variety

Mr. J. J. Keyes has removed from Hanwell to Fairview, 142, Murray Road, South Ealing, and will feel obliged if show secretaries and others will make a note of the same.

The judges engaged for the show of the Bolton and Dis. Ornithologieal and Roller Canary Society on November 22nd and 23rd are Mr. J. Trengove and Mr. J. Walsh.

Please note that the business lately carried on by me at 95, Waterloo-street, Hull, has been transferred to Miss Parker, who is carrying it on at the same address.—H. DEAN.

I am retiring from singing contests. I have won so many prizes at the Prince Albert Association that they have barred my birds from competing, so it will give the novices a chance:—J CLAKKE, Leeds.

Amateurs should enter for Peterborough, as with 27 classes £5 limit, Messrs. Robson and Howe judging, and the Railway connections, it will be a good opportunity to test the stock.—(Advt.)

Sir Walter Gilbey writes us that many of the birds in his aviaries, a visit to which is described in another part of this issue, were purchased through the medium of CAGE BIRDS advertising columns.

You will observe our show is under the Yorkshire Union rules only, and I shall be glad if you will kindly delete our Society's name from the list under Cage Bird Union license.—J. F. THACKRAY, sec., Halifax O.S.

Mr. A. Wilkinson having resigned the secretaryship of the Crewe and District Ornithological Society alll correspondence should be sent to me, I having taken over the duties.—J. C. HEATON, 27, Minshull New Road, Crewe.

The members' show of the Seaham Harbour and Dis. C.B.B.A. on November 10th, will consist of twelve classes, Norwich, Yorkshires, Borders, A.O.V. Pairs, Hybrids, and British being provided for, so Mr. Nicholson, the hon. sec., informs us.

Our Border Fancy Mules and Wild Birds judge is Mr. P. Pettigrew, not S. Pettigrew. You might change it in advertisement, as it might lead to a misunderstanding among exhibitors, probably it was my mistake.—C. MUIR, sec., Broughty Ferry.

The Border Counties British Bird, Mule and Foreign Bird Club has been reconstructed, and named the Northern B.B.M. and F.B.C. The headquarters are at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and the Secretary is Mr. J. R. Slack, 115, Stanhope Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Please state, in response to numerous enquries, writes Mr. G. T. WOOLHOUSE, the show manager, that the "News of the World" challenge trophy is to be competed for at Dulwich Show only. CAGE BIRDS Coupon Show competition will also take place at this show.

We are to have the Club Show of the Lancashire and Lizard Fanciers' Association in connection with our show on November 16th and 18th next. We shall provide eight classes for Lancashires, and six for Lizards. Mr. Barker Clegg is coming to judge these sections exclusively, and exhibitors of these varieties are asked to give him all possible support:—G. E. WILKINSON (Hon. Sec. Nottingham Show).

On Wednesday next, October 2nd, Tyneside cage bird fanciers will have an opportunity of seeing how birds should be prepared for show, as Messrs. Lister and Lowery are on that evening to give a kashing exhibition to the Gateshead C.B.S. at Lockhart's Cafe, at 7.30. On the eve of the show season the demonstration should be most serviceable to the novices.

The City and Suburban A.C.B.'s annual young bird show seems to have been once again a financial success (a feature with this society) a balance of 14s. 8d. to the good appearing on the balance-sheet, duly audited, to hand from the secretary.

Many entries have been received for our Foreign Bird Essay Competition, but as no notice appeared last week concerning it, we are accepting any outstanding essays if sent by return.

Kindly discontinue the advertisement as all birds and cages will be sold this week. I never expected such a thing. I had over 350 applicants, and have had to refuse money (hard lines) again and again. I have sent them to all parts of the British Isles, and it only shows the wonderful circulation your paper has. Over 70 birds offered and sold in four days after lists were out. With my heartiest wishes for your future welfare, and with kindest regards.—S. W. BIRCHLEY, Churchdown.

A splendid programme has been arranged for the Bradford East O.S. It includes lectures by such authorities as Messrs. Chittenden, Cowgill, Cruise, Hill, and Halliday, debates, washing exhibition, judging competition, etc. The headquarters of the Society are at Park Chapel Schools, West Bowling, and the hon. sec. is Mr. H. Hill, 31, St. Stephens Road, West Bowling.

Dibb's Canary Seed offer—Special Offer.—As an advertisement we give with every cwt. of Canary Seed purchased, one cwt. of our celebrated Health Grit absolutely free. Giant Spanish, 24s. per cwt.; Finest Turkish, 15s. per cwt.; treble-screened and free from dust. Carriage paid to nearest station. Samples on application from John Dibb, Seed Importer, 31 and 33, White Abbey Road, Bradford. Tel. 247x.—(Advt.)

"Bird Notes" for September is a number replete with interest, having, in addition to several articles of more than usual attractiveness, an excellent coloured frontispiece of the Yellow-winged Sugar-bird, the work of Mr. Goodchild, and the two full-page photographic plates. Mrs. Leslie Miller writes from personal experience of the Sugar Bird pictured, and Mr. Page, the able editor of the magazine, follows with notes on the genus; he also, writing on the Laughing Kingfishers and the genus Spermophila. The Hon. and Rev. Canon Dutton, G. Millsum, A. Silver, and H. Gray, M.R.C.V.S., are the other contributors. Interesting editorial notes completes a very readable number of the journal of the Foreign Club.

In a circular which Mr. Lythgoe is sending out to non-affiliated societies, attention is drawn to the fact that Union Members being prohibited (on pain of suspension), from exhibiting at any shows not held under the rules of the Union, non-Union Shows suffer the loss of entries of the great majority of cage bird exhibitors. The circular also mentions that the Union grants licences to non-affiliated societies, to hold their shows under its rules, at a fee of 5s., provided the show date does not clash with a Union show in the same district. Representatives are appointed to attend all union shows and an official list of shows is advertised in CAGE BIRDS each month. Mr. Lythgoe concludes thus:—"I shall be pleased to send you a copy of the rules, and trust your society will affiliate themselves to the Union or apply for licence to hold its show under Union rules, and so very materially increase your entries. Application must be made to me at least one month prior to the show."

The habit of "looking on the wine when it is red" has come down to us from the earliest times. Unfortunately the abuse of this habit, when it takes the form of a disease, is one of the most distressing scourges afflicting mankind. We make no excuse, therefore, in drawing the attention of readers to the remedial effects of "Dipsocure," the specific for inebriety, compounded and manufactured by the Carlton Chemical Co., of Birmingham, and advertised in our columns. The other day we were favoured with an inspection of many letters from all parts of the globe, in which the writers' expressed their thanks and gratitude for the benefits and cure resulting from its use. The sincerity of these communications is unmistakable, and referring, as they do, to cases seemingly beyond redemption, they indicate to all distressed relatives and friends what "Dipsocure" can do for afflicted ones. Such should make an immediate point of writing to the Carlton Chemical Co., at 582, Guildhall Buildings, Birmingham, who, we feel sure, will sympathetically give all the advice and assistance within their power. We might add that "Dipsocure," being tasteless, colourless and harmless, can be given without fear of detection, many of the testimonials perused showing that it can cure the patient without his or her knowledge.

The Scotch Fancy Outlook.

An ornithologist writes to the "Glasgow Evening Times": The outlook for the Scotch fancy Canary is bright and hopeful. Notwithstanding the unfortunate weather in the spring, when so much depended upon the elements for the breeding and rearing of home cage birds, the annual yield seems to be above the normal, especially in the Scotch fancy Canary section, which is borne out by the large entry for the famous young bird show in the Grand National Halls on Saturday. The competition will be exceptionally keen. Londoners would indeed be proud if they could bring together a similar fine collection of Scotch fancy Canaries under the roof of the Crystal Palace. In the exhibiting of the Scotch fancy Canary there is a wide difference between London and Glasgow. The Palace can only attract a few Scotch fancy Canaries, against hundreds in the National Halls. Much, however, remains to be done to educate the populace in the finer qualities of the cage bird of grace and position.

OUR GREAT COUPON SCHEME.

£200 IN PRIZES.

TO SECRETARIES AND SHOW PROMOTERS.

Societies wishing to participate in this competiton must

1. Guarantee to advertise their show in "Cage Birds" to the extent of not less than 25s.

2. Insert the full conditions of the scheme in their schedules and catalogues.

3. Make immediate application to the Manager of "Cage Birds."

The rules of each show shall prevail in each case, but in any dispute not covered by such rules the decision of the Editor of "Cage Birds" shall be final.

This competition is certain to benefit shows in the following ways:—

1. It will increase entries considerably at every show taking part in the competition.

2. It will ensure an entry of good quality birds at each exhibition.

3. It will heighten the excitement and increase the interest attaching to each show, and so secure increased publicity for those ventures

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

For Conditions See Last Week's Issue.

CANARIES.

NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Answered by J. H. PAYNE.

Dark under Flue and Beak.

Wintonian.—No; the Norwich which you say has dark feathers close to the body, and which you can only see when you blow them up, would not be eligible to compete in a clear class, and would only have to be entered in a ticked or marked class (2) The bird which has dark marks on the beak only, would go in the clear class. The dark beak is not a disqualification in a clear class, but it counts against the bird in keen competition.

A Banned Marriage.

F.W.T.—No; I certainly should not advise you to pair up your hen to the small cock, especially as you say he is of a lemon colour. From the description you give me of the hen, I should say you have a good yellow hen, and one deserving of a good partner. Procure a fair-sized buff cock for her and discard the small cock, as he is evidently only a commoner, and you would not breed anything of any account from a show point of view.

An Incurable Case.

Novice.—Your Buff hen, no doubt, has cataract developing in both eyes, and will ultimately go quite blind. Am sorry to tell you that you can do nothing for her, and as she will be quite worthless, you may as well destroy her at first as at last.

One More Chance.

Non-plussed.—I think you may certainly try your cock again next year, for the probability is that he will not touch the eggs again, especially as you say he helped rear three nests of young. I have had cocks interfere with the eggs, as yours did; but the following year they have gone on all right. Anyway, I should advise you to try him with one nest.

Young Birds Wheezing.

C.G.B.—The colour feeding of your birds would not affect them in the way you state, so you need have no fear in continuing to use the colour feed. Keep them in a cosy corner quite free from any draughts, and cover over at night with a warm cloth. Give in the drinking water fifteen drops of Syrup of Tolu and ten drops of Ipecacuhana Wine, fresh daily for a fortnight. Are the youngsters bred from healthy parents, or have you had them in a draught whilst moulting?

YORKSHIRES.

Answered by H. W. BATTYE.

Young Bird Killed.

Pongo.—It is hard to say for certain whether the other birds in the flight cage killed the bird, or not, perhaps it was a little out of sorts for some little time before you found it dead, and, owing to being amongst the other birds, you might not notice it. I should not advise keeping so many cocks in one cage, especially when they are so often fighting with each other. The same number of hens in the same size of flight cage would take no harm, but cocks are naturally more quarrelsome, and I like to cage them separately when possible.

Swelling under Eye.

F. Gosling.—The swelling you describe under your bird's eye has very probably been brought on by some foreign matter getting into the eye, probably a small particle of sand, which would irritate the eye, and cause the bird to keep rubbing it on the perches. This would make it still worse, and if it broke the skin, as it would be very likely to do, it would poison the flesh, and the swelling result. You do not say whether the swelling is soft, or hard. If the former, and it seems to be full of matter. I should lance the swelling and let it out, then bathe the part with water at about blood-heat, in which mix a teaspoonful of vinegar to a pint of water, continue this daily for ten days. If the growth appears hard and solid, bathe it as above, and dry it gently with a bit of very soft rag, then paint with tincture of iodine. Give the bird, in addition to the crushed seed, a little egg food, or a little sponge cake, well mixing into the same ten drops of good sherry wine, stop the other food you are using, also the greenstuff, and for three days make the bird's drinking water so that you can just taste it with Epsom salts, and then for a week or two continue the chemical food as you are now using.

Sits in a Ball.

Nil Desperandum.—Your bird is in a bad way, independent of the question of his not moulting properly, and has very probably had a chill, perhaps been exposed to a draught during the warm weather. Give in his drinking water six drops of good whiskey. Mix with a little egg food or boiled milk sop ten drops of Syrup of Buckthorn, sprinkling a pinch of maw seed over it. Let this, along with plain white canary seed, be his only food for three days, of course, giving it fresh each morning. Take away the seed at night, and do not return it until noon on the following day, when the bird will very likely have had a feed or two from the soft food; on the fourth day substitute for the Syrup of Buckthorn six drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. Continue the whiskey in the drinking water. Follow this treatment ten days. Place the cage in as warm a corner as you can, cover with a thin cloth to within six inches of the water hole, some in similar cases wring the cloth out in hot water two or three times a day, and if kept in a very warm place, this will sometimes set them into the moult, by giving the birds a sort of vapour bath.

A Prolific Hen.

B.H.—Your hen is certainly a very prolific one, and I should not care to keep her for next year's breeding, seeing she has laid 23 eggs this season. The odds are she will not be of very much use next season. If you could place her in a good-sized flight cage in a room where there is no cock bird, she might cease laying eggs, and as you say her only food has been plain white canary seed, I don't see how you are to keep her any plainer. (2) Pyrethrum powder, if of good quality and not very old, will not, in my opinion, injure your bird's eyes any more than other kinds of dust, but there is no necessity to let it get into the bird's eyes, sprinkle the powder over the cage top. If the cages stand on shelves sprinkle the shelves, and if your birds are infested with red-mite, catch them and give them a good dredging under the wings and about the vent, as well as other parts of the body, then roll them in a piece of cotton about one foot long and four or five inches wide, letting them stay in it from five to ten minutes. Of course, you must leave the end of the cloth open so that there will be no danger of the bird being smothered. Condy's Fluid will be beneficial if you put a few drops in the bathing water, or a weak solution in water sprinkled on the bird-room floor will prevent any unpleasant smell. (3) Your two birds that died have probably gone out of sorts from some cause, but as you do not say anything as to their symptoms I can hardly express an opinion as to what was the cause of death, we all have such cases happen, and sometimes they are very difficult to explain.

Nervous Youngsters.

A.G.P.—Most young birds at the age of yours are nervous when approached. I should advise keeping them in separate cages, and speaking quietly to them when you go near, scratching the cage front gently at the same time, when I think they will soon lose their nervous feeling, and become steady. Your feeding is not much at fault, but I prefer giving only white seed in the hopper, and giving only two parts German rape to one part maw seed, giving this separately about three times a week. They will come into full song in due course, say, in another month or six weeks, they are too young yet to be in full song, but will get on song sooner by being separated than if caged together.

Not Singing.

I.V.—Your bird will probably come all right in his song after he gets through the present season's moult. Give, in addition to his ordinary seed, either a little egg food, or a little boiled milk sop, sprinkling a little maw seed over the lot, mix a small portion of sugar with the sop as well, give this three times a week. Give in his drinking water six drops of glycerine, and ten drops of good Scotch whiskey fresh daily. Providing your bird is healthy, he will no doubt breed all right, though he may have lost his voice. Many cocks have been known to fertilise eggs that did not sing a note.

ROLLERS.

Answered by "SCHOOLMASTER."

Redmite Troubles.

Egroe.—What a pity you did not examine the secondhand cage before you introduced it into your room. Evidently it let you in for the present trouble. As you have thoroughly dressed it with paraffin, and limewashed it, I should say you are correct when you say it is now free from the pest. The insects in the glass tube you forward are redmites right enough—I never heard them called "wood-lice;" the latter are very different. You could not have fumigated your room strongly or thoroughly enough, or you would not have found so many mites alive in it afterwards. To do the job thoroughly the birds should be well dusted with Keating's (or pure pyrethrum) insect powder, and an hour afterwards he put in clean temporary cages in another room. Then all air-holes (fireplace, window cracks, etc.), should be papered over, or otherwise effectually stopped, and a strong fumigating candle or two (according to size of room), be lighted, when you close the door and proceed to paper the cracks of that up. Leave the room sealed up for at least 24 hours. Afterwards scald all wire fronts, etc., with boiling water, with a little soda added, while the cages should be thoroughly done over inside with sanitary distemper, working it into every crevice. You won't see many redmites after that, I'll warrant. Fir-tree oil (obtained from most gardeners' seedsmen) is a very good insecticide for use on perch ends, in cracks of cages, etc.

Roller Moulting.

L. G. B.—Your bird doesn't want much green-food during the moult—a sprig of tender watercress (the young growths) or seeding chickweed or shepherd's purse once a day, or a bit of ripe fruit, such as sweet apple, pear, orange or banana. In addition to the Canary and rape seeds, mix some hemp and maw seeds together (equal parts), and give a teaspoonful every other day. In between give a teaspoonful of some good maker's patent Canary food (or bread) in which you have well mixed 4 or 5 drops of Parrish's Chemical Food, obtainable from any chemist. This treatment will bring any healthy Roller through the moult in good form. A little linseed should be sprinkled amongst the canary and rape towards the finish of the moult, every day.

GREENS.

Answered by S. HADWIN.

How to Pair and Feed.

Herbell.—If your yellow-green Yorkshire cock is very dark, i.e., dark legs, feet, and beak, pair him with a slightly foul buff-green Yorkshire hen. If the cock shows a tendency to run light in colour, pair him with a dark coloured buff-green Yorkshire hen. You are wise in looking out for a hen in good time. In another month the bulk of the birds will be through the moult, and then you would be able to pick from the best. The Green Canary is probably the hardiest of the Canary tribe, and Greens make splendid breeders. There is no truth in the statement that they are difficult to breed from. The bulk of the progeny would be Greens, although it is possible some of the youngsters would show a few light feathers. You do not say how you are feeding at present, but if he is going on all right he should not want anything but seeds, plain canary as a staple diet, and mixed seeds, all varieties, about twice a week. Put about as much citrate of iron as will go on a threepenny-piece in his drinking water twice a week, until he is thoroughly finished moulting. Give frequent baths on fine mornings.

CRESTS AND CRESTBREDS.

Answered by W. E. GREEVES.

Young Canaries Dying.

Pongo.—The pairing of your birds had nothing whatever to do with the death of the young ones at five, six and eight weeks old. This is an age at which a large percentage of young birds die, the cause generally being over feeding on highly stimulating food, or an over indulgence of green food; sometimes foul drinking water. When young birds are seen to sit puffy, the better plan is to put them on a diet of bread and milk, giving them nothing else but just a little canary seed. Be most careful that the bread and milk is quite sweet, and that the water glasses are kept clean, with a constant supply of fresh water. Keep the cage bottom clean and supply a reasonable quantity of cage bird grit, which you will find advertised in CAGE BIRDS, a most essential thing for keeping birds in good health.

MISCELLANEOUS CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by "OLD JUDGE."

Cleansing Cages.

Beckford.—The only way that safety lies is in having new cages. It is quite possible that the sulphur, carbolic acid, painting, etc., would do all that is required, but there always is the doubt. I have known all this done, and then the fever break out again; on the other hand, I have known instances in which the cages have been washed and exposed only, and yet no evil has resulted.

Seed Samples.

A. E. Bate.—I have carefully examined the sample of seed sent, and cannot find anything in it likely to cause the death of your birds. It certainly is not what one would call a high-class sample of seed, being rather small, but it appears perfectly sound and sweet. You give me no account whatever about the birds. Had you described symptoms of illness, and given me particulars as to age, mode of feeding, etc., I doubtless could have helped. If you will send me these, I will gladly consider the matter further. Do you mix your own seed, or buy it ready mixed?

Colour-Feeding.

E.W.H.—I should advise you not to attempt colour feeding birds hatched on August 27th. They will not moult freely, and are almost certain to come out patchy in colour. No good could possibly result from colour feeding such late hatched birds, and the best thing you can do is to let them have good plain food, with plenty of fresh air and exercise.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Came Aboard Ship.

Skipper.—Thanks for your interesting communication. The seven birds which came aboard your ship were all Redstarts, probably. Anyway, the one that you caught, and which subsequently died, was undoubtedly a Redstart in winter plumage—"the size of a Robin, only not quite so chubby, mouse colour on back, rather darker on head, light on breast and body, reddish-brown on rump and tail, with two middle tail feathers blackish, black beak and legs, and a very bold eye." The birds would be, as you surmise, migrating to their winter home—the latter I believe ranging about Persia, Palestine, and Northern Africa. There is a certain resemblance 'twixt the hen Redstart and the Nightingale, and the unwary have before now had the former palmed off on them by unscrupulous parties as "fine coloured cock Nightingales." The cock Redstart in summer plumage is a very different looking bird, having a white streak across the forehead, a black throat patch, and a reddish-orange breast. The beak, feet and legs of the Nightingale are brownish flesh colour, and the beak, feet and legs of Redstarts practically a dead black, which is a simple point to remember, and a simple distinguishing characteristic.

Mainly about Hybrid Breeding and Yellowhammers.

Sticker In.—The weed you send is in such a pronounced state of decrepitude as to give one pause in the naming of it—I should say, however, that it was once upon a time a hardhead (knapweed). Hardheads and thistles are both equally valuable for Finches and Hybrid couples—I could not recommend one before the other, but strongly advise you to lay in all you can of both. Plantain is not by any means as valuable, but it is well to have some by one for birds that like it. Your birds would winter splendidly in the indoor aviary, 11ft. long by 6 ft. high, by 4 ft. wide (very good, practical dimensions), but I cannot hold out any hope of you doing much good in the breeding line therein, with a mixed lot of birds. I am frequently telling my querists that the latter is a most uncertain method—in short, that to throw a selection of cocks and hens of different species into an aviary is absolutely the wrong way to set about Hybrid breeding. The reasons for this I have set out at length many times in the past. In an exceptionally large aviary (especially a well-fitted outdoor one) some of the disabilities are more-or-less discounted, but the average fancier has not the good fortune to own such a place, and for him the best road to success is to provide each Hybrid couple with a home "on their own," whether a small sheltered aviary (outdoor or in), or large breeding cage. Your aviary might accommodate a number of either Canary or Bullfinch hens (no others with them), and a selection of cock Finches, with prospect of success, if you used discretion in weeding out interfering and otherwise troublesome specimens. But the flight would be very useful reserved for use of the young mules (and maybe Hybrids) bred in your cages. The Yellowhammer usually has to go in the class for "any other species (or variety) of small British." In a very large show it may have a class to itself, or there may be a class for Buntings. Everything, you must understand, depends on the wording of the schedule—very few read exactly alike. The show cage should be the regulation "Norwich Club" pattern, but an inch wider from front to back, enamelled insides and wires a very dark green.

On Many Points.

S.H.W.—Your plan of feeding, with its several mixtures made up of eighth parts of this and sixth parts of the other, fairly got me down. After a heavy dose of queries before picking your own up, my brain was too fagged to grasp such intricacies as those. It seems all right, and no doubt your birds appreciate the minute accuracy with which you endeavour to meet their requirements. The sample of wild seed mixture is very nice and well cleaned, if somewhat lacking in variety—still, you make up for the latter in other ways. Your feeding, in short, is remarkably good. I can only recommend the addition of shepherd's purse—curious you should omit it from your list.—Six birds are just about enough for an indoor aviary 3 feet long by 1 foot wide. 2: Not much room for branches, I am afraid, though same are very nice, affording a variety of grips for the feet. Should have thought one swing (two at most) sufficient. 3. For sexing of Linnets see reply to "J. H." last week. Young Chaffinches and Sparrows are all like their mothers. The young male Chaffies assume the cock's brilliant tints at their first moult, and the young male Sparrows the cock's black throat patch at the approach of the breeding season—a cock in winter plumage is more like the hen. Greypate Goldfinches are very difficult for any beginner to attempt to sex. If you get one with a long, flat looking head, viewed in profile, and dense jet black on the wing butts, you can safely assume it a male, especially if it has a faint tinge of yellow showing among its breast feathers—hens have ashy brown wing butts, as a rule.

An Outdoor Aviary.

H.S.G.—Twenty-five small birds would go very comfortably into an outdoor aviary 12 feet by 6 feet wide. I should think twice about putting a bird like a Song Thrush with them, however. A Thrush would probably not interfere with or harm them, but by his very size seems to render smaller birds nervous, and to keep them away from the food-pots. All the birds you mention would agree together well (though one can never be certain, as individuals of the same species differ much in disposition). Any squabbling would most likely occur during spring and summer — the breeding season. Then cock Chaffinches and Bramblefinches, and Yellowhammers, too, usually become evilly disposed towards others, especially of their own kind. You give no description of your aviary, but in any outdoor aviary, unheated, it is very problematical whether you could keep Chiff-Chaffs and Lesser Whitethroats alive through the winter, and Whinchats, Blackcaps, and Yellow Wagtails, are uncertain, though I have known them keep healthy and bright out in a well-sheltered and constructed place. All the principal seeds—canary, teazle, hemp, summer rape, sunflower, linseed and maw—should certainly be supplied in separate vessels—that is the only economical and waste-avoiding method. The "tit-bits" can be given as you please. Your arrangements for feeding the softbills will never do. Barley meal is worse than useless for the small delicate species you mention. A far better all-round mixture would be the one I recommend an enquirer re Waxwing in this issue. You could, of course, give an extra dish of ants' eggs, as you pleased. If you put the mealworms in a dish, the stronger birds will simply gobble them up, and the weaker—and those that need them most—will get but few. The best plan is to get your birds used to the arrival of "mealworm time" (marvellous how quickly they learn), and then judiciously scatter (throw) them on the floor of the aviary, so that every bird gets a chance to swoop down and secure a few. You ought to have described your aviary.

Nationality of Bullfinches.

E.M.—I'm sure I couldn't express any opinion as to the nationality of your Bullie without seeing it. Size, of course, is the great point of difference between the Siberian and British forms of Bullfinch—the former has a scientific name to itself, P. pyrrhula, being held to be a "larger and purer coloured form" than P. europaea, but I have seen (and others, too), genuine British caught Bullies as large as some of those coming in crates from far Siberia, and many, too, quite equal in colour. Still, a very large Bullie is not wanted for British classes, or the bird is likely to arouse suspicion and be "banned." Roughly speaking, I should think (have never measured one) six to six and a half inches from beak to tail—end to end—about the limit for a Britisher. Show Siberians are giants, looking twice as large as our exhibition bird. The class you mention, "British Goldfinch or Bullfinch" (sometimes, but not often, the word "British" does not appear) is the correct one for him. The judge would give you an opinion as to the nationality of the bird, doubtless, if you sent a request and a stamped addressed envelope to the show secretary, to be handed to the judge after he had finished adjudicating. He might have a doubt and pass the bird by; some judges do not "wrong class," and all would want to feel certain ere doing so. Cannot you get some local fancier to call and look him over?

Free with His Wings.

L. J. Shaw.—You needn't be afraid of showing your Linnet simply because he "has a way of fluttering his wings." You say he is steady otherwise, and "takes his perches" properly, and that is the main thing. A bird of good size, type and markings, such as you say yours is, will not get passed by any judge simply because he "flutters his wings"—such a sign of good health and spirits is, as a matter of fact, common to Linnets, many of them habitually showing it. He will certainly not be "disqualified." That is an ugly word, and only used with ugly deeds, such as painting, trimming, and other fraudulent practices of the exhibitors themselves. If in show condition, put your bird down at an early show—I wish you luck.

Another Outdoor Aviary.

Epor.—Most of your questions will be found answered in the reply in "H. S. G.," this week, to which I must ask you to kindly refer. You will see the methods of feeding I advocate mentioned therein. You could do without the separate dishes for linseed and maw, if you like, including them among the other seeds mixed as "tit-bits"—such as niger, thistle, dandelion, wild seed mixture, etc. You have certainly got a rare mixture in your aviary—11 Linnets, 3 each Gold and Bullfinches, 2 Redpolls, 3 Siskins, 4 Green and two Grey Singing Finches, in addition to a heap of "softbills," to wit, 2 Song Thrushes, 2 Pekin Robins, 2 Skylarks, 3 Woodlarks, Blackbird, Tree Pipit, Blackcap, Wheatear, Whinchat, Pied Wagtail and Yellow Wagtail. I trust the place is a big one. It will be interesting if you at some time or other in the future give your experiences of keeping this collection. I certainly wouldn't have a Robin in confined quarters with other birds of mine—fond as I am of "Bobby," I can't stomach his aggressive bearing towards, and bullying of, his neighbours. I have known a Blackbird make himself offensive, too, and I fancy several of the other softbills will develop pugnacious traits in the spring. I trust, once again, your place is a big one; also that it affords plenty of cover.

Criticism On Cages.

Hybridiser. — Thanks for your kind remarks. Always pleased to hear past advice has been helpful. Hope you will soon bid good-bye to your present illness. The chief fault of your cages lies in their size—they are not large enough, 21 by 15 by 10 inches. No single breeder for Hybrid couples should be less than 24 inches long and 12 from front to back. But for the large Finches (Greenfinch Bullfinch, for instance), a length of 30 to 36 inches is far better, and a width of 16 to 18 inches. Privacy (seclusion) is sought by all these birds when breeding, and with a good width one can ensure this, either by screening the nesting corner with a strip of brown paper tacked across, or by putting a screen of twigs round the nest box, or just in front of it (the method was well shown recently in our "Illustrated Ideas" column). Don't have the bottom front rail too deep (about 2½ inches over all) for I prefer my birds to stand on the cage floor to feed (through the head holes in the wire front), rather than use a perch running lengthwise of the cage. The latter is a nuisance to clean, and so soon gets fouled by excreta dropped from the perches above. Be sure to have the door made extra large. Use punched bar fronts, which any advertiser using our columns will make to any size you specify. I presume you know that a sliding partition is a most useful thing to have in a breeding cage so that one can separate, and yet not entirely part, the breeding couple if necessary. This need not be in the centre—in a 24-inch cage, for instance, 9½ inches can be left on the nest-box side, and 11 inches to hold the cock bird, if desired. Your suggested nest-box has no advantage whatever over the old style of wooden nest-box. It has, indeed, this disadvantage: the "platforms" at back and front would soon be fouled by excreta voided over the edge of the nest. The hen's tail, you will find in practice, will not catch the cage back in the old style nest box; and a perch placed about three inches from the front of the nest box, and set on a level with the rim, is far the best means of affording the birds access to it. Try your proposed method, and the one I here advise, and see which puns out best (no pun intended) when in actual use.

Treatment of Waxwing; Goldfinch Losing Flights.

1. What is the best food and treatment for a Waxwing? 2. I have a Goldfinch which has dropped its wing flights 4 times within a few weeks. He is extremely nervous at night. He seems in the best of health and very lively. He is kept in the bird room with my foreigners. Do you think wing feathers will come again shortly and can you suggest any remedy?—H. B. T.

H. B. T.—The Waxwing requires feding on a good insectivorous mixture. A suitable food is made of game meal (without grit), or finely crushed puppy cakes, six parts, ants' eggs, and dried flies two parts each, meat meal and powdered silkworm pupae one part each, by measure. Damp with a little water, cold boiled potato, grated raw carrot, finely chopped water-cress, lettuce, chickweed, etc., varying them frequently, and according to the season. Add half a hard-boiled egg to the daily food portion occasionally—or a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake. Give a few mealworms daily, and any other insect life as in season (see other replies this week). They are enormous feeders, and being indolent and neglectful in the matter of takiug exercise, usually manage to get as "fat as pigs." A mild dose of sulphate of soda is useful occasionally; also a fly round a good-sized aviary or room. Fruit, such as banana, sweet orange and apple, grocer's currants, raisins, etc., chopped figs and dates, is much relished, and should be frequently given mixed with the stock food. Berries, too, the bird is passionately fond of, and black, privet, elder, haw, etc., should be freely given whenever obtainable. Plenty of variety in the diet is absolutely essential. I remember a well-known exhibitor of this species saying he gave his birds crushed canary seed and coarse oatmeal. I have never done so personally, but should not hesitate to try, and should add maw seed too—mixed, of course, among the soft food. Let it bathe freely. 2. I am puzzled what to advise you. Such a Goldie as you describe is by no means uncommon, and is a great nuisance. The feathers will grow again, though, owing to their frequent reproduction, they may be produced in an imperfect manner. The best thing you could do would be to throw the bird into a large aviary, outdoor for preference, when he might grow out of his timidity. In any case I should change his cage to fresh quarters, and mix a small teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food in his drinking water daily for a week; then on alternate days for a fortnight or three weeks.

Blackbird with Worms.

I have a blackbird which seems to be suffering with worms. Can you advise a cure?—R. W. F.

R. W. F.—Personally I have never had a bird which has been troubled with worms. You should get a small quantity of areca nut (powder) from a chemist; also some Parrish's Chemical Food. Keep the bird without food for several hours (or clear out the cage at night and treat early next morning) until thoroughly hungry. Then prepare about a dessertspoonful of soft food, into which well mix as much of the areca nut (powder) as half covers a threepenny piece. When the bird has eaten this up, let it have the food as usual. For one day make its drinking water fairly strong with the Chemical Food, a heaping teaspoonful to two tablespoonsful of water. Afterwards, for two or three days give half-a-teaspoonful in the same quantity of water. You will find this see the Blackbird through its trouble, I fancy; if it seems necessary, however, repeat the dose of areca nut after a day's interval. Curiously enough, I have at the present moment a friend with a Linnet troubled with worms. He tried a little areca nut mixed into a small pellet with butter; but the Linnet "threw it up," or spluttered it out. He was going to try it mixed with a spot of treacle, and how it resulted I do not yet know. At one time I was under the impression small birds did not suffer with worms.

A Stock Food for Larks.

Will you give me a recipe for a stock food for Larks? I am buying a Lark food now, which seems largely composed of bread crumbs, and to have as much sustenance as the grit on the cage bottom.—DON.

Don.—A good and simple stock food for Larks, which will keep for a very long time when stored in a dry place and sealed in tins, and which any good corn dealer or seller of birds' foods will mix for you, is:—Game (or pheasant) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupæ, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the game meal without grit. If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes make an excellent substitute; or the "broken" biscuit obtainable from the grocer. If the latter be used, add an extra part of meat meal. Damp quantity required for daily use with a little grated raw carrot or cold boiled potato, or finely chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake or half a hard-boiled egg twice or so a week. Give three or four mealworms daily, and any other insects you can lay hands on, especially spiders. Give seed in a separate vessel (not along with the soft food), about a teaspoonful of Canary seed daily, with, for a change, crushed hemp, groats, maw, or rape. Let the bird have a fresh clover turf as often as possible. Many so-called Lark foods are, I am afraid, of little real use; still, they are sold so cheaply that purchasers cannot reasonably expect to get very good ingredients. Their birds, unfortunately, don't sing for long on such fare.

Wagtails, Pipits, Blackcap, and Nuthatch.

Please inform me of the best way to make soft food for Wagtails and Pipits.—How many mealworms do they require per day? What is best for fresh-caught Blackcap and Nuthatch?—S.W.

S. W.—Briefly put, my own methods of keeping Wagtails, Blackcaps, Nightingales, and similar small insectivorous birds are as follows. As a stock mixture you cannot beat:—Powdered Osborne biscuit, three parts; best ants' eggs and dried flies, two parts each; powdered silkworm pupæ, one part; meat meal, half part, by measure. Take the quantity required of this, and mix it just crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely chopped lettuce, watercress, or chickweed (use young leaves only), or cold boiled potato, varying it frequently. It is necessary, of course, to give, in addition, all the live insect food (flies, spiders, wood lice, earwigs, small beetles, smooth caterpillars, green fly, live ants' eggs, etc.) one can possibly obtain; mealworms given regularly are indispensable. To the above stock mixture I occasionally add, after damping, a teaspoonful or two of preserved egg flake, or part of a hard-boiled fresh egg, finely minced, and, more occasionally still, a little finely scraped raw lean mutton or beef. Good cream cheese is a splendid food, too; give a little, finely chopped, and mixed, of course, with the above biscuit food, or just laid on top of it. Malzena wafers may be used in place of Osborne biscuits; or, for economy's sake, the "broken biscuits" (sweet) obtainable cheaply from most grocers. All the four birds you mention will thrive on this stock food. The Nuthatch wants a few sunflower and hemp seeds daily, and a few assorted nuts, cracked where necessary. Both he and the Blackcap want live food freely when first caught, the Nuthatch being keen on mealworms; the Blackcap not much so, unless they are very small. The Blackcaps' chief requirement is plenty of very ripe fruit daily, either grated, or shredded, and mixed among the soft food, or stuck between the cage wires; banana, very ripe pear and apple, strawberries, grapes, elderberries, blackberries, etc., are all more or less appreciated—you will soon find out your bird's likes and dislikes. There can be no fixed number of mealworms per day; one has to use his discretion. It depends, too, on how well a bird is on "soft food," and how far you can supplement them with wasp-grub, gentles, small blackbeetles, earwigs, flies, caterpillars, grubs, spiders, and such-like things. It is pretty safe to say that you would find it difficult to give too many.

Brieflets.

Weeds (A. C.).—The weed is not one I ever gather myself, and I do not recognise it. You must decide for yourself whether you give it to your birds or not. Surely there are sufficient weeds mentioned in the articles on "wild plants" now running in our columns, to satisfy any fancier, or any birds.

Weeds (J. A. S.).—Have sent a specimen of shepherd's purse. You ought to find both that and plantain quite easily after perusing the articles on "Wild Plants"—few country lanes, or patches of waste land (especially old, neglected garden land) fail to hold them.

Sexes of Linnets (Dunelmian).—In last week's issue, reply to "J.H.," is told how to sex Linnets. Further, I have given the methods very many times during the past twelve months. The only conclusion I can come to is that you have read the rest of the paper, and skipped my own column—which is really heart-breaking.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Growth on Parrot's Beak.

Joseph McDonald.—If the bird is a valuable one, the best and only thing to do is to take it to a vet. and let him treat it. He should soon be able to put the matter right. However, if you prefer to deal with it yourself, if the growths are soft and contain matter, when ripe they must be lanced and cleansed with warm water containing a few drops of carbolic acid. If hard, touch them with tincture of iodine, being careful not to get any on the plumage. You do not say what kind of Parrot yours is, but if you read carefully other replies in this issue, you should not be in fault as to dieting and treating your bird. For one day only make its drinking water saline with Epsom salts, and repeat the operation in a week's time. If you elect to treat it yourself, you had better report progress in a fortnight's time. But I most certainly advise letting your local vet. see it, as it is impossible from the bare details to hand to form a definite opinion as to what is really the matter with the bird; the vet. would most probably remove the growths straight away, when the bird's recovery should be rapid.

Green Parrot with Fits.

One that wants to know.—It is the diet that is responsible for the trouble. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in two tablespoonsful of water, and as it has been used to sop, soak a crust of stale household bread in it, and see that the bird eats it; give this every other day for a week. As regards diet, see reply to "Gwalia," in this issue and diet your bird accordingly. If it will not take to the other food at first, you must give it a little bread sop, but made with clear water only, and squeezed almost dry before being given to the bird. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in its cage, and if it falls off its perch in the night, the grating had better be removed from the bottom of the cage. Note: Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, fats, or any kind of animals food whatever. Keep its cage strictly clean and a piece of cuttlefish hanging in it. A small leaf of fresh lettuce is about the best green food. If you read the other replies carefully you will find much that is helpful in the treatment of your birds. The treatment required for Grey Parrots, and such as yours, being similar.

Breeding Quaker Parrakeets, etc.

Pair of Quakers in room four yards square, along with four pairs of small Foreign birds Will they breed, and how must I get them into condition? How can I tell the sex of Weavers?—"NOVICE."

Novice.—It is very risky putting such birds as Quakers in with small Foreign birds. But you must watch them; many large birds will ignore the smaller fry around them. I have kept Rosellas with Waxbills and never had one injured; nevertheless, the practice is a very risky one. Fix, say, the wickerwork lid of an hamper in one corner of the room and put a faggot of tall bean sticks round it. As to nesting material, get an old besom, or fine twigs of similar texture, and straw in the corners and about the floor of the room. They will build quite a large structure with these, either on the platform or among the branches. To bring them into condition, diet as under, and leave them to take their own course; you cannot hasten matters. Seed mixture: Canary, millet, hemp, oats, wheat, dari, rice in the husk, and sunflower seeds; get a quart of each and mix well together, this will be their staple diet. They are very fond of fresh lettuce, a piece of biscuit or a stale crust of household bread. Keep cuttlefish hanging in the room, and crushed egg-shells and old mortar rubbish scattered among the sand on the floor. There is no reason why they should not breed under such conditions, though they are not free breeders in captivity. In the summer the male Weavers adopt a gorgeous plumage, termed coming into colour, while the females are more or less plain brown birds with dark striations all the year round, though their colours also become slightly richer during the breeding season; but with the males there is quite a change, their bridal dress being a very gorgeous one.

Zebra Finches Nesting.

Newly-purchased Zebra Finches are building a dome nest of hay, etc., in my outdoor aviary. (1) Should they be nesting now? (2) What materials do they require for lining nest? What is the best food to give them?—T.O.M.C.

T.O.M.C.—(1) It is a little late, but the weather just now is fairly open, and I should leave them to themselves. I may say I heard young Zebras the other morning calling for food in my outdoor aviary. (2) They only get hay with me, and usually find a few stray feathers for lining, as they have 50 or 60 companions in the aviary. Get a Canary nest-bag, pull this to pieces, and throw it in the aviary and they will get all they require. (3) Canary, white and spray millet, with plenty of fresh green food, such as grass in the ear, lettuce, etc. A little crumbled sponge cake, ants' eggs, and dried flies in equal parts, well mixed and slightly damped, helps them with the rearing of their young. They are hardy little birds, and require scarcely any looking after, save supplying with wholesome food and keeping clean.

Cockatoels not Rearing Young.

J. Smith.—It is very difficult to advise in such a case. Personally, if they were mine I should get rid of them if they persisted in the habit, and get another pair. However, I may tell you such cases are not uncommon; these birds, in spite of their readiness to nest, often prove very irregular sitters. Your arrangements seem all that could be desired, and I cannot suggest any improvement, and most certainly the company you name would not hinder them. I can only suggest one or two possible causes. Are the nest-boxes infested with insects? If so, it would fully account for their restlessness. Are you dieting them too well? If so, that would account for it; they get unduly stimulated, and instead of sitting their time out, pair and lay another clutch, and so nothing is done. Keep them to a diet of canary and millet seeds, with plenty of green food, and only give oats when the young are hatched, if any young are hatched, they are usually reared. Cockatoels being excellent feeders. I have a pair in my aviary, very fine birds, tame, strong and healthy, but they have reared no young this year, which I have attributed to the inclement weather; possibly this may have accounted somewhat for your non-success. With all species of birds, breeding results have been small, and losses many, owing to the wet, cold season. Though very indefinite you may possibly gather some little help from the above; but yours is one of those cases in which the two principal courses open are either to change the birds or exercise patience.

Taming Amazon Parrot.

1. Young Blue-front can fly. Will it go away if it gets the chance? 2. Do you recommend ring and chain on leg and bar to sit on?. 3. How can I make him agreeable with other members of household?—JACK-O-BIRD.

Jack-o-Bird.—1. Yes! it certainly is necessary to take care that the bird does not escape; in the country there is less risk, but in towns or suburbs there are so many things to scare a bird, that it is soon lost among the buildings and neighbours' gardens. My Hawk-headed Parrot we have out in the garden, with three yards of tape attached to one leg; but, even then, he is closely watched and not permitted to bite at the tape, and he can be handled like a kitten, but though I know he would come to us if we were in sight, I should not care to trust him loose. If you cut the bird's wing in the town, there is danger that he might be taken unawares by a cat; it would have to be unawares, for Grimalkin would never make a second open attack on such a bird. One lesson would be quite enough. 2. I recommend the cage for general use; the ring, chain, and bar, when you want to give him an airing. If you have a lawn, peg the chain down and let him enjoy the use of his feet a little in fine, dry sunny weather. 3. Let the other members of the household attend to its wants a little. Offer it some of the favourite items of its diet, talk to it soothingly, and as it becomes more acquainted with them will be better friends. No attempt should be made to handle it, till the person concerned is quite sure of its behaviour. At the same time, it is better to take the chance of a nip than to snatch the hand hurriedly away. Some individuals have strong likes and likes, and are very cunning in acting up to them, but nearly all are amenable to kindness, gentleness, and some tit-bit they are specially fond of.

Running at Nostril.

Rose-breasted Cockatoo, recently purchased, has slight watery discharge from one nostril, otherwise in good health. I cannot give anything direct to beak, as he is too savage. What can I do?—E. H. FULCHER.

E. H. Fulcher.—Get a small syringe and lightly syringe the bird's nostril with diluted glyco-thymoline; it will do no harm if a little is swallowed. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in two tablespoonfuls of water, and let it have only this to drink for the day; this can be repeated as necessary to keep its bowels freely moving, but not watery loose. Keep out of draught, yet where it will get plenty of fresh air; there is no need to coddle, as when once acclimatised, this is a hardy species. I take it that in addition to the seed mixture, you are giving as extras and to vary the diet: boiled potato, plain biscuit (dry), ripe fruit, nuts, crust of stale household bread (dry), green food; a piece of cuttlefish should be continuously in the cage, which should be kept strictly clean. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops; nor yet buttered bread, or gravied vegetables, nor any kind of animal food whatever.

Grey with Diarrhœa.

Have just purchased an African Grey Parrot, am feeding it on boiled maize, tea and milk sops, Parrot food, hard-boiled egg. It suffers from diarrhœa; what is the remedy?—"GWALIA."

Gwalia.—Poor Polly! No wonder it is ill, with such a truly awful diet. Stop the messes you are giving it at once, and diet the bird as under, and if too much mischief has not been done, its condition should gradually improve. You must continue to give a little boiled maize (this only keeps fresh one day, and the food hopper should be kept strictly clean) till you find it eating heartily of the following seed mixture: canary and oats two parts each, wheat, dari, rice in the husk, hemp, and sunflower seeds, one part each. Well mix and keep a supply continuously in the cage. When it is eating heartily of this, gradually discontinue the maize. As extras supply: Ripe fruit, green food, nuts, plain biscuits (dry), and a piece of cuttlefish should be continuously in its cage. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia over its boiled maize, and for the next month make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food. Use a glass or china drinking vessel while giving drugs. Do not on any account give tea, coffee, or milk slops, egg or buttered food. If you continue to give these, the bird will soon "shuffle off." As it is a new importation, if the diarrhœa should not yield or any fresh symptoms should develop, you had better repeat query, with full particulars, at once.

What Parrot?

A.J.P.—It is a blue-fronted Amazon, probably a young bird, and as it gets older the plumage will become more normal in colour, though areas of colour, etc., are very variable with this species. If trained, all Amazons talk, more or less, it depends largely on the care bestowed on their training; give it the benefit of both the constant repetition method and keeping it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and in time it should make a talented talker and mimic. It is not likely to do much though, in the talking line till it is tamed, and till it is thoroughly accustomed to you, you should be very steady and quiet in your movements when cleaning its cage and attending to food vessels; also avoiding anything calculated to startle it when in the vicinity of its cage. As regards diet, get a quart each of canary and oats, and one pint each of wheat, dari, Indian corn, hemp, and sunflower seeds; well mix together and always keep a supply in its cage. Also supply as extras: Ripe fruit, green food, nuts, plain biscuits and crusts of stale household bread (dry); grit and cuttlefish must be given regularly, and let the bird satisfy its thirst three or four times a day. Give about a tablespoonful of boiled maize twice a week. Note this only keeps fresh one day, and the food tin should be thoroughly cleansed each time. Keep out of draught, yet not in a vitiated atmosphere.

Outdoor Aviary Queries.

(1) Outdoor aviary 5½ by 3 by 9 ft. high. Will following birds agree: Java Sparrows, Spice Birds, Avadavats, Waxbills, Gold and Bullfinches, and Siskin, in all 16 birds? (2) Will Foreign birds live out of doors all winter? (3) Is there any chance of spice birds, Avadavats, or Waxbills breeding?—F. L. HILL.

F. L. Hill.—(1) You have your space fully occupied. I have found the species you name agree fairly well together, but there should be several food vessels or there will be scrimmages around these, and if you have the back wall thickly covered with twiggy branches, this will supply ample cover and enable them to get out of one another's way. (2) In such an aviary as yours, I succeeded in keeping many Waxbills, Mannikins and Finches out of doors all the year round, but mine had a small shed attached, 2 ft. square and well lighted, into which the Foreigners used to retire at night, also there were snug nest-boxes up against the roof, and it was so arranged with flaps along the bottom, that food could be given and all cleaning done without going inside. This only being necessary twice a year for renewal of branches and cleaning nest-boxes, etc. If you cannot arrange for the small shed, I should advise folding shutters (mostly glass) to shut over the front of the aviary in bad weather and during the night. It would give ample protection if they reached from top of aviary to within 18 inches of the ground. (3) Spice Birds, Avadavats and several species of Waxbills have bred in captivity, but not freely, and to give them a fair chance of doing so, you ought not to keep more than four pairs in the aviary. You would find Zebra and Ribbon Finches almost certain breeders, and Spice Birds, Java Sparrows, Avadavats and Waxbills probable breeders.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Cinnamon Canary (Unlucky).—This young bird died of enlargement and ulceration of the liver. This was probably hereditary and incurable; still, it is suggested a more frugal diet, with a daily supply of salad, might keep any other birds in healthier condition.

African Finch (Saetje).—Disease of liver and kidneys, suggestive of inefficient diet.

Crested Canary (Bon Bon).—Death caused by anæmia, suggesting inefficient feeding. Give fresh salad and egg food daily, and on the latter let fall, for each bird, four drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. When fresh leaves cannot be obtained, give soaked rape and mustard seed.

Canary (E. A. Peck).—This bird certainly died of Canary fever, and it is quite likely that the loss of all your young birds arose from the same cause. The infection may have been imported with a diseased bird or contaminated cage.

Canary (F. Nash).—Liver disease and general anæmia. Fresh salad and a few drops of Parrish's Chemical Food on a teaspoonful of egg cake, daily, might improve the condition of any others you might have.

Yorkshire Canary (Oliver).—The loss of this bird, and probably all the others, is attributable to "Canary fever." You would do well to read Dr. Clarke's book on the subject.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Sample Copy (S.D.H., U.S.A.).—Copy has been sent you. Pleased to enrol you as a subscriber.

6d. Order (W.F.).—This is not a rule, but it may become one in the case of continued dissatisfaction.

Subscriber (W. I. McK.).—C.B. will be sent 3/3 post free for six months, to any address in the U.K.

C.B.U. (C.P.)—The fact that your local society holds its show under a C.B.U. license does not prohibit you from exhibiting at a non-union or a union show. You are quite free to show where and how you like. If, however, your society is affiliated to the C.B.U., then you can only exhibit at union shows.

Cutting (Constant Reader).—Many thanks for cutting, which you will see we have used.

Book (J.L.).—We are pleased to know that you find CAGE BIRDS so useful, and thank you for the kind things you say about it. We can send you House's Canary Manual post free for 1s. 2d. It contains most practical chapters on Breeding and Moulting.

Bird Trainers (W.W.).—Thanks for yours enclosing picture of Indian Bird Trainers. It is very interesting, but we could not reproduce it owing to the law of copyright.

Canary Seed (A.M.).—The samples you send are certainly well grown, but we can hardly do as you wish. It is not very long since that we gave some illustrations of English-grown canary seed.

CANARY BREEDING COMPETITION.

THE RESULT DECLARED.

WONDERFUL ACHIEVEMENTS BY NOVICES.

To-day it is our pleasure to publish the names and addresses of the winners in CAGE BIRDS Canary Breeding Competition. Judging from the enormous number of papers sent in, the competition must have created immense excitement and interest amongst our readers from one end of the kingdom to the other. The wide range covered by the papers received was particularly gratifying to us. From the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland, from the great manufacturing districts of Lancashire and Yorkshire, the hills and dales of gallant little Wales, the plains of the Midlands, and the luxurious valleys of the South have they come, North, South, East, and West each contributing their quota, proving how widespread and extensive is the influence and popularity of CAGE BIRDS.

It is open to any reader to investigate on his own account the claims made by the successful competitors, but protests, etc., will not be received after October 9th next.

First Prize, £5.

Mr. J. A. WILKINSON,
114a, Hughenden Road,
Hastings.

One pair of birds reared 21 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. A. E. Godden (hon. sec.), and G. Barham, Hastings C.B.S.

Second Prize, £3.

Mr. G. T. HALLS,
8, High Street,
Mortlake.

One pair of birds reared 18 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. E. J. Browning, 24, High Street, and W. G. Betts, 55, Victoria Road, Mortlake.

Third and Fourth Prizes, £3 divided.

Mr. H. T. HOWELL,
103, Linacre Lane,
Bootle,
Liverpool.

Mr. T. D. GOODALL,
Moss Lane,
Alderley Edge,
Cheshire.

Each 1 pair of birds reared 17 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. W. B. Rimmer (chairman), and J. Foster (sec.), Bootle C.B.S., and Messrs. C. Hoyland, Lydiat Lane, and F. Osborne, Chorley Hall Lane, Alderley Edge.

Fifth Prize, £1.

Mr. W. DUTTON,
101, Poulton Road,
Somerville,
Seacombe,
Cheshire.

One pair of birds reared 16 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. A. H. Ogden, 3, Brook Place, Green Lane, Egremont, and A. White, 99, Poulton Road, Somerville, Seacombe.

Sixth Prize, £1.

Mr. F. SMITH,
3, East Street,
Northampton,

One cock and two hens reared 31 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. A. Burrows (vice-chairman), and Mr. J. Nason (hon. sec.), Northampton Hand-in-Hand C.B.S.

Seventh Prize, £1.

Mr. W. CHAPMAN
42, Warwick Street,
Walsall, Staffs.

One cock and 2 hens reared 31 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. C. H. Bennett, 20, Raleigh Street, and C. J. Allen, 114, Hatherton Street, Walsall.

Eighth Prize, £1.

Mr. G. PRICE,
No. 12, 6th Row,
Newtown, Ebbw Vale, Mon.

2 pairs reared 30 young.
Witnesses:—Messrs. E. Morris, 3, Williams Street, and Lazarus Parfitt, 56, Mount Pleasant Road, Ebbw Vale.

THE OLD HANDS' COMPETITION

The winner of the £5 prize in this competition is,

Mr. A. J. ROBERTS,
80, Anerley Park,
Anerley, S.E.

Who from 5 pairs has reared 47 young.
Witnesses:—Mr. W. Jackman, 91, Crampton Road, Penge, and Miss Mary E. Court, 13, Anerley Park, Anerley, S.E.

SOME INTERESTING POINTS OF THE COMPETITION.

It will be seen that amongst the novices all the prizes have gone to those with very small stocks, a result which will doubtless be considered to enforce the advice so constantly given by CAGE BIRDS experts, to the new hands, not to overstock themselves, but to try their 'prentice hand on a few birds, ere they seek to manage a lot.

Another point in connection with the novice competition is the closeness of the competitors. There are a couple of ties for the eight prizes which CAGE BIRDS offered, and the other leading competitors are practically treading each others' heels off. The averages are remarkably good, and show in a most marked degree what care and attention to detail will accomplish.

In the Senior, or Old Hand Competition there is a very close run between the actual winner, and the runner up,

Mr. J. MYERS,
6, Queen's Road,
Gorton, Manchester.

Who from 6 cocks and 9 hens reared 81 birds giving him an average of 9 per hen, which is indeed most creditable.

The third on the list is

Mr. F. C. FREEMAN,
31, Legsby Avenue,
Grimsby.

Who from 5 cocks and 7 hens has reared 57 young, giving him an average of 8—1.

What is indeed a most remarkable result is that achieved by Mr. R. L. Crisp, the popular president of the L.C.B.A., the Southern Yorkshire C.C., and the Crested Canary Club, who from 13 cocks and 19 hens has reared 136 young, giving him the splendid average of 7—3. This with a stock of such magnitude is indeed remarkable.

One competitor, Mr. C. Corkindale, of Studley, has from 6 cocks and 28 hens reared 169 young, which averages just over 6 per pair. The most striking feature about Mr. Corkindale's result is the large number of hens, and the small number of cock birds with which he bred.

It will be seen that we have arranged the young according to the number of hens bred from. This is undoubtedly the fairest method, and will, we believe, so appeal to readers of CAGE BIRDS, especially those who have followed this competition with interest.

The manner in which the prizes this year have had to be allotted according to the rules of the competition, has revealed to us certain weak points in the scheme, which next year we will endeavour to remove. It is obviously unfair for a man who only has one pair to compete with, to be placed on a better footing so far as chances go, than another man who takes up half-a-dozen pairs, and to perpetuate a Bull if he is given only an equal chance he is in a better position. For any breeder, be his skill what it may, stands less chance of getting an "average" result from half-a-dozen pairs than he does with one.

CLUB REPORTS.

BRISTOL F.A.

Meeting of the Cage Bird Committee held September 16th, when good progress in the arrangements for Open Show on December 4th and 5th was reported. Classification was the chief business, and there are to be 8 classes for Norwich, 13 Crested and Crest-bred, 5 Cinnamon (Cinnamon Club patronage), 8 Yorkshire, 4 Lancashire and Lizard (club patronage), and about 16 other open classes; also 10 members' classes. There will be five ten-guinea challenge bowls for open competition, as well as a members' cup, and in addition a splendid list of specials was reported, including a number of tankards, carvers, and field glasses of a value somewhere near £15. These specials will be sent by post, free of expense to winners. Another concession which should be appreciated by exhibitors was agreed to. Exhibits are despatched from Bristol December Show by midnight trains, and it has, of course, been the practice of the railway companies to make a charge on the owners of exhibits for this late collection. This year the Bristol Fanciers' Association have decided to themselves pay the railway companies these cartage charges. It was also agreed to take up CAGE BIRDS Prize Competition. This will be the 17th annual show, and the B.F.A. hope it will add to the high reputation they have already gained.—G. T. H. MAGGS, Hon. Sec.

WALLSEND C.B.A.

A smoking concert in connection with the above was held in the large club rooms, Station Hotel, on September 5th. A very large and able company of amateur artistes had kindly offered their services for the occasion. The room was comfortably full, about seventy members and friends being present. The chairs were filled by Mr. J. M. Macdonald and Mr. W. Ronald, and the piano was elegantly manipulated by Mr. E. Earnshaw, who is a splendid accompanist for a mixed variety of singers, taking a lead at once, and carrying each successfully through in grand style. The Chairman made a few opening remarks in regard to the aims and objects of the Wallsend Society, its progress in members, and increasing funds, its meeting a want which was long felt, and had now got into a sound and established going concern. He took the present opportunity to thank the public, who had very generously assisted in giving their generous support and patronage, by which it only had been possible to carry the club on. Mr. Hall was asked to lead off with a song, "On the benefits of a bird," which was well received. Messrs. McVallie, the Tinnis Bros., and others following, brought us to the main event—the presentation of a silver cup, given to the club by Mr. Heddon, to the member who had won the most points at the recent feather show. Mr. W. Ronald, of Walker, was judged the winner. A fine engraved gold centre silver medal was given by the Society along with the cup. Alderman John O'Hanlon, in a few well chosen remarks on birds, handed the cup and medallion in the name of the Society to Mr. Ronald, who suitably replied. Mr. Hargreaves sang a splendid song, and received a hearty encore. He was followed by Messrs. Hill and Stamp with "Excelsior," receiving a great ovation, and they gave as an encore "Larboard Watch." The cup was now filled and sent round the hall. Then our veteran member, Mr. W. Wright, who was on his top note pitch, fairly took the matting, singing "The Stowaway," also receiving a hearty encore, to which he complied. Mr. A. Gray, who is this year giving a nice medal for our show, gave a Scotch recitation, which caused a lot of merriment. "Marches" and "The Blind Boy," by the Tinnis Bros., on the concertina and banjos, was a great treat, "The Blind Boy" especially. Mr. Hargreaves, with a very good song, secured a storm of applause, and gave as an encore "When the gentle breezes blow." Mr. Stamp gave "The Veteran" in grand style, and Messrs. Hall, Milum, McVittie, and others gave us good entertainment. The Chairman brought the most thoroughly enjoyable evening to a close. Mr. Wright moved that the best thanks of the meeting be accorded to our Chairmen, Mr. J. M. Macdonald, Mr. W. Ronald, and Mr. Haddon, for the able way the concert and smoker had been carried out and presided over. Mr. Macdonald replied, and said it certainly was one of the finest smokers ever held in Wallsend, and expressed the wish that it would not be long before the Society would give another such evening's enjoyment. "Auld Lang Syne" ended a most enjoyable evening.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EGGS IN SEPTEMBER.

SIR,—In reply to a correspondent in your last week's issue re "Eggs in September," I have a young Roller hen whose last young one was eight weeks' old on the 22nd of September, and was surprised, on cleaning the cage out, to find an egg on the cage bottom on the 10th, she hatched and reared the young one herself without the cock bird being with her. I have also a Roller cock that has been moulting for the past seven weeks and has never gone off song, not for one day, but has kept on tutoring the young birds all through his moult. I should like to know if this is an unusual thing, as this is my first season with Rollers?

W. SMITH.

SIR,—I read the account of "D. E. P." in last week's issue of having eggs in September. I have myself a Norwich hen which has been away from the cock since the latter end of August. She has laid three eggs, and has been making a nest with old feathers and plaintain stalks. She has already had four nests of young ones. I wish your paper every success. MADRALING.

SIR,—In answer to "D.E.P." in last week's issue, he will be interested to hear that I have had a similar experience, one of my Canary hens laying two eggs close together in a flight cage, where several are moulting off, on or about September 10th (am not quite certain to a day). Also I was very interested to see, this very day, September 22, one of my hens quite busily carrying about several dried stalks of Shepherd's Purse, looking for a "Cosy Corner." This is evidently due to the late spell of fine weather, which apparently has surprised the birds as much as ourselves. In conclusion I should like to congratulate the Editor of our good old CAGE BIRDS on his enterprise in intending to produce shortly "The Poultry World," which I have no doubt will prove a boon to that branch of the Fancy.

C. K. EATON.

THE CLEAR AND TICKED QUESTION.

SIR,—The above question having again cropped up, I trust more notice will be taken of the matter than on previous occasions. In my opinion it is a very serious question, which demands the earnest consideration of every Canary Fancier; as very often a ticked bird in one judge's opinion is a variegated in the eyes of another. For instance, two or three years ago I entered a young Plainhead Norwich at four different shows, at three of which he was awarded first prize, while at the fourth show, after being placed first, he was "wrong classed." Now in all four instances the schedule read the same, viz.: Class I. Clear or Ticked, Class II. A.O.V. Personally, I did not mind a great deal, but, unfortunately, I had instructed a novice as to which class his birds were eligible to compete in. Imagine my feelings when the judge, after placing my friend's birds first and third respectively, examined their markings and "wrong classed" them also! I attached no blame to the judge, as no mention was made in the schedule as to what constituted a tick. I was informed afterwards that the birds had been judged under the Yorkshire Union interpretation of a tick, which I was given to understand is as follows:—"A ticked bird is one with dark feathers on thighs, rump, or any part of an otherwise clear body; it may also have a mark on one eye, wing, or tail, but not more than one such technical mark separately, or in addition to any other variegation on its body." I gather from the above that it is possible for a bird to show more dark than light feathers, and yet be eligible for a ticked class. For instance, a bird may have dark feathers covering one wing, its neck, and the whole of its breast right away to its vent, so long as the other wing, its tail, and eyes are not marked; and yet be termed a ticked bird. This to my mind is very misleading to the novice, as he knows not in which class to enter his birds, unless the officials of a society running the show are thoughtful enough to have inserted in their schedule what a tick is. I am of the opinion that we should have a universal definition, and would be glad to see the question taken in hand and settled by the Cage Bird Union. A. W. CURTIS.

C. B. U. SHOWS AND NON-MEMBERS.

SIR,—Our Secretary has already had an enquiry as to whether non-affiliated exhibitors can enter under the C.B.U. Rules. I thought that if you could find it convenient to print the answer "Yes," it might be of benefit to both the C.B.U. and all show Secretaries, as there are, no doubt, some beginners that are unacquainted as yet, with the rules, etc., also, some of the older hands seem to want it knocking well in their heads.

SYDNEY L. COCKS.

A STRANGE MIGRANT.

SIR,—I was staying in East Suffolk on my holiday, and my friends knowing I am interested in bird life, asked me if I could name a bird that is visiting there this breeding season. It is similar to a snipe, rises up in the air like a hawk, makes a noise when in flight like a goat, which has interested all who have seen it. Its nest was found with six eggs, nest and eggs are both similar to a Moorhen's, but are not much larger than a Misselthrush, it was found on the marshes, about half a mile from the open sea. Some, believe the goat noise is made by the wings. It is the strangest visitor they have ever seen. Plenty of migrants are seen about there every year, being a quiet place and close to the sea. INTERESTED BIRD LOVER.

SOME NEW PARRAKEET HYBRIDS.

SIR,—It may interest some of your readers, especially Parrakeet breeders, to know I have this year succeeded in breeding three Hybrids between cock Yellow-rumped Parrakeet (P flavcolus), and hen Red-headed Rosella. They are fine, strong birds, and now take seed themselves. They do not resemble either parent, but I should think when in adult-colour they will be more like the cock than the hen, as the back feathers are dark green, with dusky or blackish centres, and not at all like young Rosellas, of which I have bred a great number. The cheeks are white near the bill, shading down to dark blue at the bottom, whereas in the Rosella the whole of the cheeks are white and in the Yellow-rump they are all blue. I have tried this year to cross cock Many Coloured with hen Red-rump. I put up two pairs, and have had five nests of eggs from them. They all sat out their time, but every egg was clear, although the cocks were very attentive to the hens, frequently pairing. I had one young hatched, between cock Adelaide Parrakeet and hen Rosella, but it only lived a fortnight. All these birds seem to do a nest full of young much better than a single young one. I have bred nine young Red-rumps from three pairs this year, all fine, strong birds. I also tried a hen Rosella with cock Ring-necked Parrakeet, giving them an aviary to themselves, but they have done nothing. I have also bred a good many Budgerigars, both Yellows and Greens. I may say I have made enquiries from the greatest authorities, and find the above cross, Yellow-rump and Rosella, has never been produced before. C. P. ARTHUR.

SWALLOWS' STRANGE NESTING PLACE.

SIR,—I thought the following incident might interest your readers. When I was staying last June, with friends, in a Staffordshire village, I noticed that a pair of Swallows had built a nest in quite a low porch, belonging to the back door of the house. The porch was only about 7 feet high, and quite near to the kitchen, from which, it may be guessed, anything but soothing sounds frequently issued. People were constantly going in and out of the porch, and a dog and cat were frequent visitors to these back regions. The brave birds kept their anything but secluded corner, in spite of all these disadvantages. The eggs laid, had not been hatched when I left the house, but I have since heard from my friend that the young birds prospered and finally flew away.

THE CRESTED CANARY CLUB AND COMING SHOWS.

SIR,—The ten guinea bowl for the best current year Crest and the ten-guinea bowl for the best current year Crest-bred were competed for at Nottingham, Nov., 1906, and were won respectively by Messrs. Norwood Bros. and W. Glasscock. These bowls are to be won three times. 1904 winners at Bristol, Messrs. Norwood Bros. and T. J. King; 1905, L.C.B.A., Earl's Court, Messrs. R. L. Crisp and Geo. Colledge. In 1907 these cups will be competed for on Nov. 2 and 4 at Norwich, which gained the majority of one over Derby and Cheltenham, which tied for second place. Instead of the five 42s. silver cups this year there will be ten specials value 21s. each, and they will be competed for at Plymouth, Oct. 22-23; Cheltenham, Oct. 26-28; Norwich, Nov. 2-4; Cambridge, Nov. 12; Leeds, Nov. 15-16; Nottingham, Nov. 16-18; Derby, Nov. 26-27; Bristol Fanciers, Dec. 4-5; L.C.B.A. Horticultural Hall, Dec. 6-7; and the Crystal Palace, Jan. 31 to Feb. 4, 1908. These specials are for the best current year Crest or Crest-bred that has not previously won a first prize. Exhibitors must state on entry form for inclusion in catalogue all winnings (if any), and mark 21s. special after each competing entry. No member to win more than one of the 21s. specials during the current show season, and neither can the successful member win any other cash special at that particular show, and there must not be less than four competing members, or the special will be withheld. The following cash specials will also be competed for at these shows in addition to the 21s. specials, viz.: 5s. for the best Crest, not the property of the 21s. winner, and 5s. for the best C.B., not the property of either the above winners. The following cash specials will also be competed for, viz.: 5s. for the best Crest and 5s. for the best Crest-bred not the property of previous winner at Dulwich and Peckham, Oct. 17-18; at Bournemouth, Nov. 26-27; Eccles and District, Nov. 30; Wimbledon, Jan. 8-9, 1908; and St. Helens, Jan. 10-11. The following cash specials will be offered, viz.: 5s. for the best Crest, 2s. 6d. for the next best, not same owner; 5s. for the best C.B. not owned by either of the former, and 2s. 6d. for the next best C.B. not owned by any of the former winners. The £25 silver challenge cup presented by Mr. C. Roberts, Blackpool, will be competed for at Plymouth, L.C.B.A. (Horticultural Hall), Cheltenham, Bristol Fanciers, Glasgow, Edinburgh (S.N.C.B.S.), Carlisle, Cambridge, Leeds, Preston, Gateshead, Manchester, Nottingham, Birmingham, Swansea, Cardiff, Norwich, Leicester, Derby, and the Crystal Palace, on condition that the respective show secretaries forward a catalogue with awards as soon as possible after the show, to enable the points to be counted, to be won three times for the highest aggregate number of points gained at the above specified shows, only one bird in each class to count. The four highest receive a gold, a silver and gold, a silver and a bronze medal, in addition to a beautifully illuminated diploma. Winners 1903, Rev. G. W. Joyce; 1904, Mr. G. Grant (London); 1905, Mr. I. Brotherton (Bolton); 1906, Mr. Henry Mills (Northampton), second Rev. G. W. Joyce, third Messrs. Norwood Bros., and fourth Mr. T. J. King, C.C.C. Novice competitions.—A handsome silver cup, presented by Mr. R. Rhodes, Nottingham, for the highest aggregate number of points gained by a novice member at all shows giving one Crest and one Crest-bred class (providing one of the club judges officiate) during the show season 1906-7, ending with the Crystal Palace February Show, 1908. Also at all shows providing the above two classes there will be a cash special of 5s. for the best Crest, and 5s. for the best C.B. not the property of previous winner. Any novice winning his three first prizes according to the Cage Bird Union's definition will receive a special prize value 21s., if such wins necessitate his promotion to the champion section prior to the end of the competition for Mr. Rhodes' cup. N.B.—For any of the above competitions, both champion and novices, there must not be less than four competing members, or they will be withheld. Members must write C.C.C. after each entry and novices "Novice" in addition, and for birds bred in 1907 champions must write bowls and 21s. specials after the entries eligible to compete for them. The members have carried by a substantial majority that they desire the name of the breeder inserted in the catalogues after each entry, and members are respectfully desired to conform to this request. The winner of Mr. Rhodes' silver cup for most points scored at all shows providing two novice Crest classes for 1906-7 is Mr. T. Mason, of Leek, and the winner of the bronze urn, presented by Mr. J. W. Hall, of Cromer, for second most points is Mr. C. J. Willis, London. The members agree to accept prize money on the sliding scale when two novice classes are provided, providing there are less than nine entries.

EXHIBITS AT PETERBORO'.

SIR,—Owing to not having the Secretary's duties to attend to at our coming show, I have taken charge of the despatch of the birds from the show, and would like you to let me advise all exhibiters sending from the South, or any part of Wales, to send their birds through London, and via Gt. Northern from there to us, as I have made arrangements for them to leave here at 12.52 a.m. on the night of the show, and they should all get away from London by the Newspaper trains, so arriving at their destinations in good time. All birds for the North can be sent by 12.33 a.m. by the same company, the Gt. Eastern contingent by the 10.58 p.m., and the Midland, London and N.W., and the Gt. N. and Mid Joint, by the first morning trains.

SYDNEY L. COCKS.

A PLAGUE OF MICE.

SIR,—Will you kindly thank all those who helped me out of my trouble re advice for plague of mice? I have put same into operation, as I had the painters and plasterers in the house when I received my CAGE BIRDS. I got them to look at the wall in my bird-room, which is upstairs, having a wooden floor. When they removed the plaster, which was loose, they discovered the wall was an old stone one with two coats of plaster on it, which would make it impossible to keep mice out. So they tried a wall opposite, and found that brick. I had cages put up there, by the same means as Mr. F. J. Rook advised, only with strips of wood up the wall, starting three feet from the ground, and not running across, as that is how I had them before, and the mice could run from one cage to another. I have a cat trained as Mr. Cenarth advised, but as mice come through wall five feet from ground, a cat was no use, only for the mice on the floor. The other wall I had plastered up, and have not seen signs of mouse-hole yet. I forgot to state I left old wall quite plain, and put no cage or seed near it, or I daresay the mice would have come through the soft plaster and cement.

AVALON.

QUAKERS THAT TALK.

SIR,—I am much pleased with Mr. Wesley Page's letter on "Quakers that talk," and if you have enough space for another letter, will first say that I am a woman! I have heard that birds can imitate a woman's voice best, but don't know whether this is true. It was my husband who taught my bird to say "Oh, dear, what can the matter be?" and as he did so he bowed his head with each word, which the bird still does, and with that sentence only. I feel so glad that Mr. Page believes my statements, as the parrot-keeper at the Zoo looked rather incredulous. I was away from my birds for four months last year, during which time the hen bird died, so I had to get a new mate last November. Both hens have learnt to speak, but not so fluently as the cock bird. He generally puts his right claws confidingly on my forefinger and goes through all his sayings. But often, when the cage is out in the garden, I hear him going through his whole vocabulary. When I uncover his cage of a morning he usually says, "There he was," and when I come into the room he says, "What is it, what is it, dear?" Of course, these birds have never been in an aviary, and the cock bird was alone the first two years I had him. I never keep them in a room where people are, as then they shriek at the top of their voices, and they don't like strange voices. But I myself like their "singing," and they are so intelligent.

M. B.

Sir,—I did not notice the reply referred to by "M.B." in last issue, or I could have added another specimen to the list of Quaker Parrakeets that can talk. The bird I know of, belongs to a near neighbour of mine, and curiously enough this bird is the first and only member of the Parrot race they have owned, and has been within my knowledge ever since it was purchased, when the owner sent to enquire of me how it should be fed. The bird, I am told, is quite a plain talker, but its repertoire is limited, though not more so than a specimen of a talking Indian green. It is kept by itself, and is, I believe, the

BIRDS RETURNING TO CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—I have read the account of wild birds returning to captivity. About 18 years ago I was the proud possessor of a couple of fine Goldfinches, house moulted. A farmer's son, a friend of mine, took a fancy to one of them, and I gave him one. I was then living in the country. One morning while he was feeding it it managed to escape, and he followed it for about 600 yards, when it settled down in a large beech tree. Well, he came and told me of his loss, and we came to the conclusion that it was gone for ever. I had had no experience of birds at that time, and it was in the heart of the country, in the county of Down, but I took out my Goldfinch in his cage to the place where he last saw his bird. It was not long before he started to sing, and the fugitive answered. Then down he came to the cage, and had a drink out of the water tin, for he had then been out three hours. We had no bird lime or trap cage, so we decided to bring his own cage and place it beside the call bird, and sure enough in he went and started to feed. I got up and closed the door, and he lived for eight years a caged "prisoner," always happy and as good a songster as I ever heard. We fed our birds on hemp alone, with plenty of green food, as we were quite ignorant then of what they should have. The above can be proved by the then owner.

JOHN MCGRAW.

SWEATING HENS.

SIR,—I quite agree with Messrs. Cutmore and Wellings, there never was a sweating hen and never will be, the hen's nature is to give out pure dry heat. I came to this conclusion some years ago, when I had one or two of these cases, I studied and found out the cause. I will go one step further to say why and how it is breeders are troubled with these hens. It is partly, if not all, the fault of their owner, so prepare for this before they are put up for breeding. One cause is a long pointed mandible, they cannot shovel up the excreta clean because the beak is, as I say, too pointed; give them some hard substance to grind it down, and they will do their own work. Over-grown beaks are more prevalent at the end of the moult, and so it drags on until they are wanted for breeding. I keep a little old mortar stuck constantly in the wires, this has the desired effect. We come now to a more critical point of view in the so-called sweating hen. We all are more or less too eager, and think we can show the hen how to perform her duty. I say leave the birds alone as much as you can, because this thing happens with timid and nervous hens. We go into the room anxious to know, and have a peep to see if they are feeding strong. We poke them round to see if all is well and crops full, little thinking what harm we are doing, because out comes the excreta from them into the nest pan. As soon as they are put back flop goes the hen, never stopping to clean them. Repeat this and sweating hens will be plentiful. Some hens you can do as you like with, others are quite the opposite. When a hen does her work properly she takes the droppings from them before they have a chance to touch the nest at all.

GARNER.

AVADAVATS BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—I was much interested in reading E. Sprankling's account of the successful rearing of Avadavats in his aviary. The conditions he names, an outdoor aviary, with a jungle of wild growth, are practically the only conditions under which these interesting little birds are likely to reproduce their kind. I should be much interested if he would kindly take particular notice, with dates, of the various changes of plumage, from the nestling feathers to the full adult plumage. High temperature is not needed; these little birds have lived in my outdoor aviary, periods varying from six to eight years, and I have one at the present time which has been out of doors (a female) five years, and bathes in the winter as soon as the ice is broken in the morning. It was my privilege to see in a Bedfordshire aviary a week ago, in an aviary (much smaller than E. Sprankling's) devoted to Waxbills, a nest containing two or three fully fledged Green Avadavats, practically ready to leave the nest. The nest was a spherical one, with entrance hole facing the light, and it was built among the dry stick or branches fixed in the aviary. Golden-breasted Waxbills, Cordon Bleus, and Common Avadavats also occupied the aviary, and several other nests were among the branches, so I expect to hear of further results a little later—that is, if weather keeps open. Owing to garden aviaries being much more numerous of late years, the accounts of the breeding of these pretty and interesting little birds are getting more frequent. Mr. Sprankling is to be congratulated on his success, and I hope he will rear the birds to maturity. He should then get many interesting facts as to how long this takes, with the various changes of plumage, and how brought about, by a growth colour in the feathers, or by an actual or partial moult.

SCOTTISH BRITISH BIRD AND MULE CLUB MEDALS.

SIR,—On opening CAGE BIRDS this week, I was agreeably surprised to see that "A Member's" letter had been replied to in such a manner as "Hardhead" has done on behalf of the S.B.B. and M.C. He says that the Bathgate officials always go about their business in a most blundering way. I put this statement of his down to pure ignorance, because I can refer him to Mr. Bruce, C.B. reporter, and he will find there was not a show in Scotland last season could beat it for entries or management, and he will find that it was the record show in Scotland. This could not have been brought about in a blundering way. I don't claim that Bathgate has the best classification for British, but I do claim this, that Bathgate is the pioneer show in Great Britain for British birds. If he does not believe me he can easily get proof of this from old schedules, or if he writes to Mr. Dewar, of Edinburgh, I am certain that he will get the necessary information from him on that point. As to "Hardhead" saying I will spoil a good country show if I don't stop, I don't know what he refers to, as I can safely say the only harm I have done in the past was to guarantee more classes for British birds than any other fancier in Scotland. If this is what he means me to put a stop to, he will be mistaken. "Hardhead" says that Bathgate did not get the medals because they had no judges appointed. Why did Kirkcaldy get them, when not even the name of the Secretary, date of show, where show was to be held, and the judge had been fixed? No, Mr. "Hardhead," this argument won't do. "Hardhead" might explain next week why Kirkcaldy did get them. He quotes "My Burly Friend," I presume this is myself, but I can assure you, Mr. Editor, that I would rather be described thus, than as being slecked and beating behind the bush as "Hardhead" certainly has done. I don't know what kind of "Hardheads" there are in Leith, but when I am gathering them, I sometimes come across one with a little maggot in them, and not seed. I call these hardheads a "Little Maggoty," which I think Mr. Hardhead certainly is. If "Hardhead" had signed himself "Dandelion," I don't think he could have been more bitter than he apparently is towards Bathgate show and officials. As to "A Member's" letter of previous week, re Broxburn show being non-existent, why is it that I am a member of it?

JAMES LIVINGSTONE.

SIR,—In last week's issue of your popular weekly, I notice a report of the Scottish B.B. and Mule Club meeting at Kirkcaldy. As a member of said club, I am at a loss to understand why they did not grant medals for Hamilton and Bathgate Societies, seeing that they give such a splendid classification. I consider it a downright shame that such should be meted out to such popular societies. I also notice that medals have been granted for a West of Scotland Society. Will the Secretary, or any officials of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Clubs kindly give particulars of this Society, as no one seems to know who is working this concern. Their officials have never been published, and I should like to know on what grounds the Scottish B.B. and M. C. granted this alleged Society's medals. For some time past things have not been going too smooth in the S.B.B. and M.C., but little did I think that things were in such a rotten state. Its about time we had an opposition British Bird Club. What say ye, boys?

A WELL KNOWN SCOTTISH FANCIER HONOURED.

Proposed Presentation to Mr. Thos. Smith

SIR,—A meeting of members and friends was held on Saturday, Sept. 20th, in the Grand National Halls, when a proposal was made, and duly seconded, that an appeal be made to members and friends for subscriptions to present Mr. Thomas Smith, the worthy secretary of National Derby Ornithological Society, with his painting in oils as some slight recognition of the services he has so freely given the Society. The following amounts were subscribed:—

Mr. Robert Wright (Greenock), 10s. 6d.; Mr. James Hogg (Oakley), 10s. 6d.; William Hart (Glasgow), 10s. 6d.; Frank Streatheam (South Alloa), 10s. 6d.; D. Maxwell (Laurieston), 10s. 6d. Mr. A. Porteous, 67, Nithsdale-road, Strathbungo, Glasgow, along with Mr. James Hogg, Oakley, were appointed joint secretaries. All subscriptions will be duly acknowledged by them. The list remains open until the 20th Oct. We specially ask members, etc., to assist us in bringing this to a huge success.

THE SHOWS.

SCOTCH FANCY NATIONAL DERBY.

The annual show of this association was held in the Grand National Halls, Glasgow, on September 21st. A finer collection of young Scotch Fancy Canaries never was brought together; that was the general verdict. A year or so ago there was unmistakeable evidence that the Scotch Fancy was on the decline, which was commented upon by various writers; the dauntless spirit of the members of the National Derby would not let it go. The result of their spirited action in the spring and summer was clearly displayed at the annual show. Entries numbered 360, and the quality far excelled that of former events, proving what can be done by perseverance. The judges handled every exhibit carefully and exercised the greatest judgement in the selection. The gentlemen who officiated were Mr. A.Clark, Rutherglen; Mr. A. Hamilton, Caldercruix; Mr. A. Nisbet, Galston; and Mr. A. Paterson, Edinburgh. Prior to the event each forecaster announced his own favourite; one of the western favourites was successful, namely, Mr. McClure's clean buff cock, full of merit; he was undoubtedly the best bird in the hall, and the win could not have been more popular. Mr. McLennan's buff piebald hen was the runner-up, and it also was much admired. The green bird, of which so much had been said and written about beforehand, was nowhere, a lesson to wait until the day of reckoning. The executive, especially Mr. Hart, the honorary president Mr. H. Wright, the President, County Councillor James Hogg, the vice-president, Mr. Smith, the secretary and treasurer, the committee and the members, had every reason to be proud of the arrangements, and the proceedings. What has been done can be done again, and they mean to have a better show next year. Scotch Fancy Canary breeders are full of hope. Many enquiries were made for stock, but as it is rather early few purchases were effected, but they will follow. Mr. McClure expressed himself well pleased with the new cup, to use his own words, he said, "It is, without doubt, the best I have arrived at." This means a great deal, coming from a noted cup winner. The awards seemed to be well received, and every bird in the show was a credit to the breeder.

YELLOW COCK (clean or foul) (40): 1 and 2, McLennan, a very nice pair, and entitled to their position, erect, head forward, good neck, clean chest, long body, fine curve on wing, and tail under perch; 3, Muir, erect, fine round back, good body, and full of action; 4, Jackson, prominent shoulder, erect, nice droop, fine body and quick in movement; 5, J. Hogg, a splendid all-round bird of much promise, likely to improve; 6, Petrie, a really fine type, and full of promise; 7, Prentice, fine type and style; 8, Smith, a grand solid exhibit. HEN (47): 1, Johnston, a beauty, grand size, erect, decided drive, long neck, neat head, clean chest, long body and wing, tail under perch, full of action; 2, McClure, another champion hen, very stylish, and of fine quality throughout, erect, neat head, long neck, clean chest, grand body and wing, free in action and tail; 3, Gray, erect, finely positioned head, neat and in proper condition, good body, wing and tail; 4, Thornton, a thoroughly typical Scotch Fancy, and wins here; 5, Hope, fine size and quality, deserves its position; 6, Ward, good type; 7, Renwick, a real fine hen, and promises well; 8, McCaig, fine type, good size. YELLOW COCK (piebald or green) (30): 1, Thorns, very erect, good shoulder, nice drive, long body, well tapered, good action; 2, Maxwell, splendid size and style, erect, nice droop, grand body, wing and tail; 3, Ward, erect, nice drive, neat neck and head, good body, wing and tail; 4, McLennan, grand size, good stock bird; 5, Strathearn, erect, takes fine position, nice droop, good body, wing and tail; 6, Muir, good size and style; 7, Hope, fine exhibit; 8, Ferguson, fine type. HEN (49): 1, Thornton, superior type, well up, grand reach, clean front, fine shoulders, chest, body, wing, and tail; 2, Muir, good size, erect, decided drive, good shoulders, body, wing and tail; 3, McLennan, erect, fine neck and head, nice droop, good body, wing and tail; 4, Fleming, erect, fine size and style, good action; 5, Gray, a fine type; 6, O'Donnell, good all-round; 7, Kirk, fine type; 8, Nivan, a credit to the breeder. BUFF COCK (46): An exceptionally strong team, full of merit, all good quality; 1 and 2, McClure, 1st cup winner, the most stylish buff cock that has yet appeared, medium size, sweet head, grand reachy neck, extraordinary droop, round prominent shoulders, nicely cleaned out chest, rare depth through chest, nicely curved body and wing, sweeping tail, ideal position on perch; 2, another outstanding exhibit, somewhat similar, but not quite so prominent, both are very creditable to the breeder; 3, Miss Brown, erect, decided drive, good body, wing and tail, a grand exhibit in good company; 4, Fleming, another grand all round exhibit, splendid type; 5, Johnston, erect, neat head long neck, prominent shoulder, clean front, good body and wing; 6, Brown, grand size and style; 7 and 8, Dobson, an excellent pair. HEN (46): Black, wins easily, erect, decided drive, good shoulder, fine front, good body, wing and tail; 2, Urquhart, high in colour, fine, reachy bird, good body and wing; 3, McCaig, a really fine type, good size and style; 4, Hope, a gem, and entitled to its place; 5, Petrie, a very nice exhibit; 6, Dobson, fine quality; 7, Gray, nice type; 8, McCaig, good stamp. BUFF COCK (piebald or green) (42): 1, McLennan, a neat light-built bird, erect, decided drive, fine head and neck, good body and wing; 2, Morrison, massive frame, grand type, a little over perch, good quality throughout; 3, Petrie, erect, decided drive, good head, neck and shoulders, fine body and wing; 4 and 5, Muir, a fine pair, good quality; 6, McArthur, nice type; 7, Maxwell, good quality and substance; 8, Morrison, fine stamp. HEN (48): 1 and 3, McLennan, 1st, runner-up for cup, and best of opposit sex to winner; large, erect, decided drive, prominent shoulders, fine front, rare deep body, beautiful wing; 3, a very fine type, erect and full of quality; 2, Price, a really fine type, grand circle and well positioned; very promising; 4, Muir, grand size, type and style; 5, Smith, good stamp; 6, Bowman, nice bird; 7, Morrison, fine style; 8, Kennedy, fine quality.

GERRARD CROSS.

This annual event was held on September 19th. Only three classes were provided for cage birds and these were judged by Mr. C. A. Howe. Canary, A.V. (9): 1, 3, Lees, grand shaped, wing marked buff Norwich, capital colour, nice quality, and a clear buff of good quality and colour, but not as chubby; 2, 4, res, Spring, 2nd nice stylish yellow Yorkshire, 4th neat-bodied buff Norwich; hc, Miss Cooper. BRITISH: 3, 1, Burrows, well marked, nicely feathered Wryneck; 2, withheld; 3, 4, Beckley, 3rd chubby-shaped, good-coloured Bullfinch, 4th, very smart Bullfinch hen. FOREIGN (3): 1 and 3, withheld; 2, Taylor, blue and red Macaw, nice colour and size; 4, Exton, nicely-marked Budgerigar.

. . THE NEW PAPER . .

for Poultry Keepers.

"THE POULTRY WORLD."

First Number will appear shortly.

"What! another new paper devoted to Poultry? Surely the field is full?" The answer of THE POULTRY WORLD to that remark will be brief. The bottom rungs of every ladder are crowded, but on the top there is always room, and it will be the aspiration and endeavour of THE POULTRY WORLD to be right on the top rung every time.

The promoters of THE POULTRY WORLD believe that there is a call for a really well-produced, well-edited, well-managed weekly poultry journal, conducted upon modern lines. They intend to devote all the energies of an experienced, specially selected and practical staff of poultry experts, to the production of an entirely novel modern periodical. They aim at catering intelligently for the poultry interest in its entirety on modern lines. They believe it should be possible in this way not only to find great favour amongst present supporters of poultry journals, but to create additional support in an entirely new public. They want to enlist the sympathies and arouse the attention of many new devotees to the cult of poultry-keeping, whilst retaining the support and sympathies of present-day adherents.

"The Poultry World" will set itself out to be a pioneer—a breaker of new ground. But whilst it will strive to find fresh ideas, to bring young and glowing blood into the poultry hobby, it will cater to the full for, and treat with the utmost consideration and respect, the veterans of the fancy and any and every person whose record in connection with the poultry world gives them a claim to its regard. THE POULTRY WORLD will lay itself out to attract with equal force the "old hand," experienced breeder, the hardy amateur, the professional expert, the ordinary fancier, the recent recruit, and the raw, struggling tyro. To all and each of these it proposes to be a veritable gold mine of information and delight.

Some poultry journals, popular and well conducted in their way devote a considerable portion of their space to pigeons and other topics. Now, THE POULTRY WORLD will be, first and last, a journal purely for poultry-keepers, and persons interested in poultry. No man ever accomplished anything worth the doing in this world unless he concentrated his whole-hearted attention upon the object he had in mind. And it will be the earnest aim of THE POULTRY WORLD to encourage the modern spirit of specialism and special effort. All extraneous and superfluous side-lines will be put on one side. Our battle-cry, if we need one, will be THE POULTRY WORLD for the poultry world—no dabblings in pigeons, dogs, rabbits, cage-birds, or any other pets, but complete and whole-hearted effort concentrated on the cultivation and improvement of poultry and poultry alone. THE POULTRY WORLD will be a specialist poultry journal, jealous of every favour shown to other subjects, loyally insistent on the claims and rights of poultry-keepers to the end of the chapter.

There will be no excuses offered by the Editor of THE POULTRY WORLD because the poultry section of such and such a show was not reported, whilst the pigeon, or some other, section was fully dealt with. Poultry and poultry-keepers will have the continuous, sole, and undivided attention of the men behind THE POULTRY WORLD, and the results of that policy will best speak without further comment from us.

"The Poultry World's" Programme.

The public, for a poultry paper, may be divided into three classes: Utility Poultry-Keepers, The Fancy, and the General Public. Every class of reader will be well catered for. Let us deal with each seriatim:—

1.—The Utility Poultry Keeper will find THE POULTRY WORLD the premier journal for his purpose. It will give weekly articles by leading experts on the practical, useful, and profitable side of poultry-keeping and raising. The markets, and business side of poultry-keeping will receive special attention. The latest American improvements will be fully recorded.

2.—The Fancier of Poultry will find every poultry show of any consequence thoroughly, conscientiously, and graphically described in THE POULTRY WORLD; the individual merits and defects of all winners will be painted by the most able reporters procurable, regardless of expense. All the transactions of Poultry Clubs, and Specialist Poultry Societies will be faithfully reported. Articles on topics concerning fancy poultry, and of interest and value to the fancy will form a regular feature. The illustrations throughout will be copious, yet carefully considered.

3.—The General Public should find THE POULTRY WORLD vastly interesting, because it will treat the subject popularly, devoid of all technical terms. It will try to prepare in as simple, straightforward and interesting a form as possible for its readers, all the material facts and figures relating to the hobby. Its Query Columns will receive special attention; every answer will be couched in practical, sympathetic language; every detail of the question will be covered by the amplitude of the answer, without any tedious verbosity and repetition, or curtness and brevity.

4.—The whole poultry world will find THE POULTRY WORLD greatly to its taste. Frequently during the show and egg seasons, without any extra charge whatever, we propose to issue a coloured plate, printed by the leading firm of process engravers in this country, on exquisite art paper, with the sole idea of securing the best possible result. Art Supplements, in which art will really have some share, through which the photographer will walk arm-in-arm with the artist and the expert, will be constantly offered to the supporters of this new journal. Every human effort and ingenuity and fertility of idea will be brought to bear upon making THE POULTRY WORLD an absolutely original, up-to-date, active periodical, worthy of the subject it will cater for, worthy of its promoters and their ideals.

As it is of the utmost importance that we should reach as wide a public as possible with the first issue, we shall print at least 100,000 copies, and the edition, with the coloured plates and supplements it will include, can be valued at £600. We rely upon the co-operation of poultry enthusiasts to make the advent of THE POULTRY WORLD known as widely as possible. It should be considered the duty of every poultry-keeper not only to secure out of idle curiosity the first issue of THE POULTRY WORLD, but to assist in ever so small a measure in its reproduction. The Editor will be grateful for the slightest assistance given him, and will be glad to hear from competent and reliable representatives of the poultry interest all over the country. He is anxious to supplement his staff by as many able and intelligent lieutenants as desire to take part in this Great Revival, the Great War of Specialism against Stagnation. The promoters of THE POULTRY WORLD have no personal ends to serve, no axes of private animosity and dislike to grind. The columns of THE POULTRY WORLD will be open to all independently. Its aims are high. Its resources will, we hope, be ample. It will constantly strive to deserve the individual support of every poultry-keeper, as well as that of the whole of

SIR WALTER GILBEY'S AVIARIES AT ELSENHAM.

Sir Walter Gilbey, Bart., threw open to the public the beautiful grounds and his aviaries of foreign birds at Elsenham Hall on Sept. 18th, and between 400 and 500 people from all parts of the district availed themselves of the opportunity of spending a very pleasant afternoon.

Few private grounds are more beautiful than these, while the aviaries, which are situated on the west side of the house, contain one of the best private collections of foreign birds in the country. Sir Walter is particularly fond of these birds, as well as horses. He has kept a few birds for years, but it is only during the last three or four years that he has made bird-keeping a real hobby. His aviaries are exceedingly well appointed, and it must be said that all the occupants looked remarkably well, under the care of the expert aviary keeper (Mr. Gilbert), who was formerly one of the keepers at the Zoo. There are summer and winter quarters for the birds, the chief difficulty, as may be imagined, being to keep alive during the winter months those which come from the tropics. Some of these have already gone into their winter quarters.

There are altogether over a hundred in the aviaries and they include some very rare specimens, not to be found even at the Zoo. Quite the most interesting to Wednesday's visitors was an Australian piping crow, which Sir Walter obtained last year. The piping crow is common in aviaries in this country, but probably Sir Walter would have considerable difficulty in obtaining a better bird than this. Although only two or three years old he pipes several well-known tunes. His favourites are "Up and down the City-road," and "Merrily danced the Quaker's wife"; and his beautiful mellow note could be heard in the grounds for a considerable distance and added quite a charm to the surroundings. The next most interesting birds, probably, were a pair of bleeding-heart pigeons. They are very curiously marked. Upon a white breast is a blood-red spot about the size of a florin, which gave one a very real impression at first sight that the birds had been badly wounded. They came from the Philippine Islands, and are very rare indeed, as they are now protected in their own country, and consequently difficult to get. The collection of Australian parrakeets which Sir Walter has secured is very fine indeed. It includes pair or single specimens of the Many-coloured, the Blossom-headed, the Golden-fronted, the Red-wing, the Rosella, and the Stanley parrakeet, all beautiful birds, the latter being very rare. There are also Red-crested Cardinals from South America, Crimson Cardinals from North America, Mexican mocking birds, and a Cuban mocking bird. Only one other Cuban mocking bird is known to be in this country. The one at Elsenham is a very fine singer, and imitates all the other birds in the aviary. A pair of African glossy starlings threw off a lovely metallic colour in the sunlight; and a novelty in this species was a pure white starling, which is really a freak. Another pair of pretty birds were Brazilian hang-nests, and a pair of Australian laughing jackasses also attracted a good deal of interest. These latter are of the kingfisher type, and in their wild state feed upon small snakes and lizards. In a large aviary in the open air, with a piece of ornamental water in the centre, were seen Carolina and Mandarin ducks, purple gallinule from South America; Californian quails, and Indian white-faced ducks, while other hardy birds included Siberian nut-crackers, blue-bearded jays, etc.

Sir Walter and his daughter (Mrs. Hine) moved about among the visitors and everybody was pleased to see the honoured baronet in good health and looking all the better for his holiday in Wales.

The gardens and aviaries were thrown open again on Wednesday afternoon last, from two till six o'clock.

WIBSEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The above society held a very successful Meat Pie Supper on September 21st. About 25 members and friends sat down to supper, which was catered for by the landlord and landlady in their usual tempting manner, and full justice was done to the fare provided. After supper an impromptu concert was arranged, and songs were sung by Messrs. W. Chapman, D. Thornton, J. and H. Taylor, and W. Hillas. Mr. R. Jackson gave several selections on the gramophone, and Messrs. Wood and Foster gave several comical recitations, which caused the party to hold their sides with laughter, and the evening was brought to a close by eleven o'clock striking, all too soon.—E. W. JOHNSON, sec.

LANCASHIRE CANARY ASSOC.

Meeting held September 14th at Littleborough. Good attendance of members, presided over by the President, Mr. John Nadin. Minutes of previous meeting were confirmed, and correspondence accepted as read. Littleboro Society have promised to alter their show date and join the C.B.U., and therefore secure the patronage of the L.C.A. Mr. Jas. Brookes, of Littleboro, was accepted a member. There are up to date between 30 and 40 paid up members on the books; a good record for the coming show season. Any Lancashire Canary fancier wishing to compete for the L.C.A. specials at the coming shows should send on name and 2/6 subscription to—JAS. LAW, Sec., Merefield, Rochdale.

The Cage Bird Traffic in the United States.

By HENRY OLDYS (Assistant, Biological Survey, U.S.A.)

In the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture.

Three hundred thousand cage birds, largely Canaries, are annually imported into the United States. Some of these destined for zoological parks and a few for private aviaries, but the great majority find their way into the hand of those who desire to have a cage bird or two to brighten the home. This yearly influx of captive birds may seem large, considering the comparatively small number usually in evidence; but it must be remembered that they are scattered over an area of more than 3,000,000 square miles, and are distributed among a population of more than 80,000,000, which allows but 4 birds a year to every 1,000 persons.

Uncle Sam's "Fancy" Spirit.

It is not difficult to account for the motive that underlies this widespread habit of keeping captive birds. The same spirit that leads to the domestication of wild flowers for adornment of the home and the pleasure derived from their beauty or fragrance is responsible for the similar transplanting of wild birds from their natural homes to those of their captors, and the parallel extends to the subsequent production of new varieties.

As a people, Americans have less of this spirit than prevails elsewhere. Despite the multitudes of birds weekly entering the country—a single vessel will occasionally deliver ten or fifteen thousand—our interest in avicultural pursuits is comparatively slight. In Europe aviaries are numerous, and their owners maintain a common interest by means of avicultural organisations and periodicals. A friendly but keen rivalry prevails as to who shall first succeed in breeding species that have not previously been bred in captivity or in producing new Hybrids. The journals and magazines devoted to aviculture serve as a medium of exchange of methods and experiences, and keep their readers in touch with each other. In Germany, particularly, the practice of keeping, rearing, and studying cage birds is very common. In many a dwelling one room is set apart for birds, and these bird rooms are not confined to a particular class, but are found in the homes of people of every rank and condition. As long ago as 1880 some 200 societies of amateurs existed, and several weekly publications and magazines devoted to birds attested the general interest in avicultural pursuits.

The breeding of cage birds for sale is a regular occupation in several parts of Europe. Germany produces hundreds of thousands of singing Canaries in the Hartz Mountains, those of St. Andreasburg being unrivalled songsters; in England, Scotland, and Belgium fancy varieties of Canaries are regularly bred for the trade; and at the Royal Society's zoological gardens of Antwerp, Belgium, the breeding of many species of foreign cage birds is systematically conducted.

The United States has few aviaries, and most of these are devoted to Pheasants and other large birds. For a few years an avicultural periodical was published, but the support it received was apparently insufficient, and at present there seem to be no periodicals, and very few associations strictly devoted to aviculture. Hence in this country there is not that community of interest and information that characterises the avocation in Europe. America supports a few small shows, mainly exhibitions of Canaries; and small exhibitions of cage birds, mostly Canaries, are usually held as adjuncts to the annual poultry shows of New York, Boston, Chicago, Toronto, and other cities. The breeding of Canaries and cage birds for the trade in any numbers is practically unknown on this side of the Atlantic.

Some English Favourites.

The once extensive trade in native American birds has dwindled to the vanishing point. Formerly Mocking Birds, Blue Birds, Cardinals, Tanagers, Indigo Birds, and Nonpareils were caught in large numbers, and sold either here or abroad, and more or less trade in other species prevailed. Blue Birds, which are known as Blue Robins or Blue Nightingales in England and France, were imported into England some time before 1869, as in that year they were first bred in the London Zoological Gardens. They are regarded with much favour by amateurs, and have been repeatedly bred in private aviaries. Mocking Birds were bred in French aviaries before 1873. While intolerant of cage mates, they are much valued in Europe for their song, which, however, is there considered inferior to that of the Nightingale—a judgment partly assisted, perhaps, by patriotic bias and association.

Scarlet Tanagers and Cardinals are ranked high in Europe, and frequently win prizes bird shows. Evidence of the esteem as birds in which the latter are held is by the fact that they are listed on the list of a London bird dealer for mber, 1906, at more than $5 apiece. (A ar, as readers will probably know, is value 2d. English money.—Editor C.B.). Of interest in this connection is the statement of Gemelli Careri, quoted by Nuttall in his Manual of Ornithology published in 1832, that "the Spaniards of Havana in a time of public distress and scarcity bought so many of these birds (Cardinals), with which a vessel was partly freighted from Florida, that the sum expended at $10 apiece amounted to no less than $18,000." Indigo Birds and Nonpareils are valued for their attractive plumage. Of the latter thousands were annually exported to Europe, where they sold for $1.50 to $2 apiece.

Some Astonishing Figures.

The importation of foreign cage birds has grown to its present proportion, not only in this country, but in Europe as well, within the last fifty years. Up to the middle of the last century, apart from Parrots and some other of the larger species, few birds were imported into Europe, and as late as 1860 only about 60 different kinds of foreign birds were brought in, and these in moderate numbers. But about this time a rapid increase began, and by 1880 the species imported approximated 700, and the individuals from 500,000 to 800,000. The Japanese Rohin, a favourite cage bird of to-day, was first brought to the London Zoological Gardens in 1886, and the Shell Parrakeet (Budgerigar) of Australia, now one of the best known of exotic birds, and sold at wholesale in London for about $1.37 a pair, was first brought to England by Gould in 1840, and for the next ten years commanded $100 to $125 a pair.

In the United States the growth of importation has undergone a similar development, lagging, however, slightly behind the European growth. In both cases the sudden invasion of the markets by foreign birds was due to the advantages of quick transportation. When supplies from distant lands were brought by sailing vessels but few birds survived the long voyages. But the steamships afforded opportunity for conveying birds with speed and safety, and dealers were quick to avail themselves of the changed conditions. As long ago as 1865 there was a brisk American trade in foreign cage birds of all kinds, and by 1880 this had so increased that a single dealer in New York City handled 70,000 Canaries each season.

The decline in the trade in domestic cage birds has doubtless stimulated the trade in foreign cage birds, which advanced from 235,433 imported under permit of the Department of Agriculture in the year ending June 30th, 1902, to 322,297 in the year ending June 30th, 1906, an increase of 37 per cent. in four years. At the beginning of this period the model bird-protective law had been adopted by 16 States; at its close it was in force in 35.

Of the birds imported in the year ending June 30, 1906, 274,914 were Canaries, and 47,383 miscellaneous birds. The Canaries were nearly all raised in Germany. Thirty-three per cent. of the miscellaneous birds were from the Orient, 30 per cent. from Europe, 22 per cent. from Australia, 7 per cent. from Cuba and Mexico, 6 per cent. from Africa, and 1 per cent. from South America. The remaining 1 per cent. were of unknown origin. In addition to these, 2,700 Canaries, mostly from Germany, and about 6,000 Parrots from various tropical countries came in without permit, no permit being issued for these birds when they are unaccompanied by others.

A Peep Behind the Scenes.

A peep behind the scenes is always interesting, and when we see diverse and remote regions of the world pouring their treasures of bird life into our country, a desire is awakened to know by what means this is accomplished. In some cases the method is as old as the history of maritime commerce. From the time when the vessels began to make voyages to other countries sailors have brought back trophies of various sorts, including specimens of the fauna of distant lands. Some birds are still thus brought in, and are bought by dealers in the various ports of entry. This method, somewhat systematised, prevails at San Francisco, where the trade, temporarily suspended by the earthquake and fire, is now beginning to revive. Supplies are here obtained from the crews of steamers coming from China and Japan, who make a regular business of transporting cage birds, usually under an arrangement with the steamship companies by which they are employed, whereby freight is paid out of the proceeds of sales. The birds thus imported are considerable in number, but few in species, being mainly Java sparrows, Diamond Sparrows, Chinese Mocking Birds, and other common kinds.

But most of the birds imported are secured by more highly organised methods. Several of the leading importers maintain forces of men to secure the desired birds either in their native haunts or in European ports to which they are brought by the agents of other importers. Parrots are generally taken while still in the nest. During the nesting season the leading American houses send men to Cuba, Mexico, or South America to obtain stock. Headquarters are established by these agents at some point convenient to the Parrot country, and natives are employed to secure the young birds, which are forwarded to the United States in periodical shipments. Agents have sometimes been sent from this country to Africa to secure supplies of the favourite African Gray Parrot, but these are usually obtained in European ports from vessels arriving with supplies for the large European houses.

Small birds, other than Canaries, are generally captured with nets. Expert netters continually visit remote regions in the interest of wholesale houses of Hamburg, London, Liverpool, and other large cities of Europe. Similar expeditions are dispatched from New York and Philadelphia to Cuba and Mexico, and occasionally to more distant lands—even India; but the principal American houses maintain connections with establishments in Germany, through which their supplies of Old World and South American birds are more commonly procured. Canaries are obtained by agents who visit breeders in the Hartz Mountains, the Tyrol, and other parts of Europe. A few, however, are imported at San Francisco from breeders in China and Japan.

How Birds are Shipped.

Most of the small birds received from Africa and Australia are shipped in large boxes especially prepared for the purpose. These boxes are of different sizes, and accommodate from 1 to 125 or 150 birds, according to size of box or of birds shipped. Shell Parrakeets are sent from Australia in especially large boxes, sometimes as many as 500 making the journey in a single box. The birds so shipped are of a peaceable disposition, and may be caged together without fear of their injuring one another; but some birds, such as Bullfinches, Goldfinches, and male Canaries, are quarrelsome, and each bird has to be placed in a separate cage.

Canaries are confined in small wicker cages, seven of which are strung on a stick, constituting what is technically known as a row, or stick. When shipped across the ocean these rows are crated, and a linen or burlap sack, specially made for the purpose, is placed about each crate. A crate usually contains 33 rows. To paraphrase the old riddle—every sack has 33 rows, every row has 7 cages, every cage has 1 Canary (or sometimes 2 if the occupants are the more peaceable females). Often more than two dozen crates are shipped in one consignment. Each of these must be opened every day of the voyage, every row removed, and food and water placed in the cages. In this daily re-crating the rows are rearranged so that the benefits of outside positions may be more evenly distributed among the birds.

On Arrival.

On arrival in port consignments of birds (which pay no duty) are entered at the custom-house under permit from the Department of Agriculture, usually secured in advance by the importer. The larger shipments are generally examined by one of the special inspectors of the Department stationed at the principal ports of entry. Nearly all shipments subject to such inspection enter at New York and Philadelphia. After the inspector has examined a consignment to ascertain that it contains no objectionable species, and has noted, for subsequent report to the Department, the number and kinds of birds it comprises, the importer is free to dispose of it.

It is the aim of the importer to sell his stock as quickly as possible, to diminish his losses by death, and so increase his profit. It is estimated that the mortality en route and in the store among some of the more delicate species of birds, such as African Finches, may reach 14 per cent.

How Zoos are Supplied.

Zoological parks and aviaries are usually supplied direct by the importers, but the general public is reached by way of the retailers. Many small bird stores are scattered over the country, and some of the large department stores have added birds to the great variety of merchandise they handle. Small consignments are shipped to retail dealers by express (at double rates). In the cages or boxes are placed water and food sufficient to last until arrival at destination. Sometimes, when the distances are unusually long, the express messengers supply fresh water and food en route, and large consignments are often accompanied by agents of the importers. Several of the principal importers have branch establishments at various points, such as New Orleans, Chicago, and San Francisco, which fill western orders.

WILD BIRD NOTES AND QUERIES.

The Ring Ouzel.

It is not generally known that the Ring Ouzel is a migratory bird. Arriving in March and April, he spends the summer in favoured localities, for this bird is not to be found everywhere; he loves the moors and the higher rock-strewn ground, where some babbling stream rushes down the hillside. These spots he shares with the Dipper and Grey Wagtail, his loud, Blackbird like note sounding shrill and clear in the crisp air. Occasionally an old bird or two may be seen during the winter months, but as a rule he leaves us after eating a few of the autumn berries which grow so plentiful in the districts he affects. Collecting in flocks they make their way to the Continent, where they do considerable damage in the grape-growing districts.

Stupid Jackdaws.

One generally looks upon the Jackdaw as being a rather knowing and somewhat clever fellow, but occasionally we hear of some incident in bird life that quite upsets our notions of the cleverness or dullness of certain species. During the better part of the spring and early summer several pairs of Jackdaws have been vainly trying to build in the revolving cowl of a kiln, with the result that the sticks, straw,, and other materials have fallen to the floor. One would think that after the first attempt and failure, they would discontinue, and try elsewhere; but birds are very persistent in the choice of a nesting site; we often get instances of this in our aviary birds.

Nesting Boxes.

The nesting boxes put up in the grounds for the use of birds during the summer should not be removed now the nesting is over, but should be cleaned out, and allowed to remain for winter use. It will be found that many small birds select these cosy places; not alone, for several individuals will huddle together for warmth. It is very doubtful if some of our smallest birds could manage to pass through a severe winter without mutual help in this direction, but the most curious thing is the different behaviour of the common Sparrow at this time. Some of them will crowd into cosy corners while others will roost in the bare trees, exposed to the worst conditions imaginable.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given for respectively the best and two second best cuttings of original bits about birds. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age. All efforts must be briefly and clearly written, and ON ONE SIDE OF THE PAPER ONLY.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

Oh! What a Surprise.

While on a ramble with two companions around Anstey I noticed how much bird life there was—Chaffinches, Thrushes, Blackbirds, Skylarks, Hedgesparrows, Greenfinches, and lots of others. But while playing near a stream with its old bridge I tripped over a large stone nearly falling into the stream. To my surprise I almost put my hand upon the handsomest of all British birds, the Kingfisher. Thinking there was a nest somewhere about I began searching for it; I found it under a rock not far from where I fell. I put my hand under and found four snow-white eggs. The nest was about as big as a Thrushes, mostly made of fish bones. Knowing that this bird is so rare, and being a lover of them also, I never disturbed them; and I hope no one else has been and destroyed this beautiful bird's nest:—E. Sarson (age 12 years), 37, Vaughan Street, Leicester.

*We Call Him "Washy."

I have a little Goldfinch, we call him "Washy." It was grey when I got it, and it has been through the moult now and his feathers are very pretty. When I talk to him he spreads his tail like a fish and wags it from side to side. We feed him on plain seed and a little teazel, which seems to be his favourite dish. He is a sweet singer and changes his notes and can sing longer than the Canaries we have:—May Beadnall (aged 11), 7, Albany, Middlesborough.

*Stoat Attacked by Small Birds.

A stoat was making its way from an adjoining field, across the road with a young partridge in its mouth which it had killed, when it was pursued and attacked by two Skylarks and a Wagtail. The three assailants, acting in concert, rose a little in the air, then pounced down upon their ruthless enemy, repeating their attacks so furiously that the stoat was obliged to abandon his prey. Each time he attempted to regain it, they renewed their attacks with increased fury, evincing a courage which was quite admirable in birds of their pacific nature. At length the stoat espied the narrator of this combat close by; and probably feeling some misgiving as to his safety amidst so many enemies, he ran off with the utmost speed, leaving the partridge behind:—Margaret L. Fraser (age 14), Gortuleg, London Road, Redhill, Surrey.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6, according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

J. SANDIFORD, Bird Specialist, PRESTON LANCS.

THE ONLY ART

in bird catching is to get proper appliances to work with. Given these, and it is just as simple as it looks. Every appliance sold by me is guaranteed to be made by men who are not only practical makers, but experienced bird catchers as well, and neither time nor money is spared to make them the most up-to-date, reliable, and durable on the market. To prove this to your own satisfaction, I only ask you to have anything I sell on approval and compare it with a similar thing from any other advertiser, and if mine is not far better value at a less price, return it to me, and tell your friends that my articles are useless. For months and months last season I publicly asked any dissatisfied purchaser to smash up anything he had had from me, and I would return him the whole of his money, but not one article was smashed up, nor was I ever asked to refund a penny. This fact alone speaks volumes for the quality of my goods. Clap nets made from genuine ¾inch mesh thread, 3 yards long, 4/- pair, 4 yards 5/-, 5 yards 6/-, 6 yards 7/-, 7 yards 8/-, 8 yards 9/-, 9 yards 10/-, 10 yards 11/- pair, all fly 4 feet, and are actually 5 feet deep, in order to allow plenty of "kill." All clap nets have two nets to the pair, and are properly geared all round and fitted complete with pure hemp lines, beech pegs, birch stave poles, and everything ready for immediate work. Any size clap net made to order. Sparrow nets fitted on 19 feet poles, 6/6 pair. Spring net traps, 24 inches long, 1/- each, 18 inches long, 9d. each. These net traps are by far the largest on the market, are entirely self-acting, will catch and hold uninjured, any bird from a Wren to a Rook, and are so simple, a child can set them. Single trap cages 6d. each, six 2/6, twelve 4/6; double ditto, 10d. and 1/- each, 7/6 and 8/6 dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each, 11/- dozen. Patent self-setting and self-acting trap cages, work automatically, 1/6 each; round or square topped call cages, 3d. each, 2/6 dozen; loose netting, genuine thread, ¾inch mesh, 7 feet deep, 3d. yard, 9 feet deep, 4d. yard, 12 feet deep, 5d. yard, all post free. This netting is exceedingly fine, but very strong, made specially for bird netting, and must not be confused with the thick American cotton netting being sold as bird netting. Real Japanese bird lime, absolutely the strongest made, and only lime to stand all weathers, guaranteed to hold a Rook or Hawk, ¼lb. 6d., ½lb. 10d., 1lb. 1/6; sample box 3d., all post free. Pure hemp pull lines, 64 yards long, 1/4 each, post free. Full list of all catchers' appliances and sample of netting one, stamp. Goldfinch or Linnet cages, 4/6, 5/- and 5/6 dozen; Lark cages 3/6, 4/-, 4/6 and 6/6 dozen; Redpoll cages, 2/6 dozen. All wire Canary cages 3/6 and 4/6 each. All brass drawing-room cages with ruby glass, 5/-, 6/-, 6/6, 7/6 and 10/- each. Parrot cages from 4/- to 20/- each. Every description of cage in stock. Dealers please send stamp for full printed list. Following few testimonials go to show value sent out. "7, Winboltst., Stockport, Sept. 6th.—Sir,—The netting I got from you some months' ago is best I ever used, please repeat the order, viz: 36 yards of 12 feet for clap nets. Yours, A. Pennor" "Near Elm Tree, Blisworth, Sept. 10th.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. lime. It is best I ever used. Yours, J. Harris." "Greenhill Gamslake.—Sir,—Please send another ½lb. bird lime, which I find out is better than I can get off anyone else. Yours, W. Phillips." "6, Berkeley Terace, Southall.—Sir,—Please send following netting. I can say that the netting I had from you far excelled all my imaginations, being far superior to that of Messrs. . . . Yours, J. Crockford." "Claremont Place, Larkhall.—Sir,—Please send another pound of bird lime. I never lost a bird with the last pound I had from you, it is real good stuff. Yours, G. Alexander." "Harrow, Middlesex.—Sir.—Thanks for netting to hand, which is very satisfactory. I shall bear you in mind in future. Yours, C. Steeles." Remember everything sent on approval, cash or deposit system, and money refunded in full if every satisfaction not given. By dealing with me you not only save money, but you get appliances with which you can catch birds, not frighten them away. See British Bird Column.

MATTHEWS, LINNET KING.

Exhibitors, Mule breeders, and contest singers. If you have never been in possession of a first-class showing Linnet, or a fierce singing Linnet, I should like you to try one of my special birds. I have moulted over 200 grand Linnets this year which have been thoroughly trained under my old Cheshire champions, and are singing his grand notes. I have supplied all the leading contest singers and exhibitors for the last five years, and scores of open winners in showing and contest singing have been supplied by me at working men's prices. Call and inspect my British bird buildings. Everybody is welcome to hear my birds sing; being specially arranged for keeping British birds, and is the largest in England. I always keep three or four hundred in stock of all kinds of British, and nothing but the best. I don't want your money, only your orders. Pay when you are perfectly satisfied. You have only to state what you want. Any kind of British for showing, fierce singing, or large birds for Mule breeding; and I will send any distance at my own risk. I guarantee your birds are carefully selected from hundreds of dozens, which pass through my hands every week. This enables me to send you first-class specimens. I have over 100 testimonials this year, which are open for inspection, from leading fanciers all over England, so if you want a first-class team of British birds for showing, any kind, send at once, and I will send any distance, as all my birds are properly caged and well on seed before being sent out. Big, fine, healthy Linnets, extra large Norwich type, with nut-brown backs, well pencilled, steady, 1/6; also a few extra picked specimens, 2/-; clean moulted Linnets, been specially trained for contest singing, 2/-, with beautiful singing cages, packet of special mixed seed, instruction how to feed, 3/-. All contest singers should try one of these special birds; also a few good Linnets, been used for catching, 2/6. Goldfinches, Goldfinches. Large selected Peartree Goldfinches, well buttoned and mooned, with good broad heads, well tanned, make sure winners, selected from hundreds, 2/6. I have a few grand house-moulted Peartree Goldfinches, well buttened, will soon make a name for their owners at 5/- each; also a few extra good call birds, been used to catching, 3/- each. All birds sent out exactly as described. Anyone requiring a first-class team of British birds should sent at once to me; state wants. Gentlemen, could fairer terms be offered? All birds sent on seven days' approval; cash or deposit, at my own risk.—Matthews, Birdcatcher, 44, George-st., Hyde, Cheshire.

THE GREAT POINT

about my method of dealing is that I don't merely ask you to take my word. I want you to see my birds and satisfy yourself that you are getting exactly what you want, and for this reason I send all on approval, entirely at my own risk, either cash or "Cage Birds" deposit system, and despite the many assertions to the contrary, I claim to be the originator of approval system in connection with wild birds. Splendid large Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, in perfect health and condition, 1/6 each, three 4/-; six, 6/6; twelve 12/-; specially selected large birds for exhibition or muling and warranted in song, 2/- each; three 5/-; six, 9/6; twelve, 16/-; few clean moulted cocks in full colour and superb condition, 3/- each; hen Goldfinches, 1/- each, three 2/6; grand large red-breasted cock Linnets in pink of health, 9d. each; three, 1/6; six, 2/6; twelve, 4/-; few specially selected cocks for show in song, 1/- each; three, 2/6; six, 4/-. Please note every Linnet sent out is guaranteed red-breasted, thus proving that you get all cocks for your money; these Linnets are same sort as supplied by me to contest singers throughout England, so why not buy first-handed and save extortionate profits:—Cock Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/-; six, 1/6; specially selected yellow cocks for show, 1/- each; cock Chaffinches, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; Redpolls, three 1/3; six 2/-; grand cock Skylarks, 9d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6; cock Bullfinches, 1/6 and 2/- each; hen Bullfinches, 1/- each; two year old cock Linnet Mule, 7/6; two year old Siskin Mule, 7/6; young cock Linnet Mules 5/- each; see following few testimonials:—"Park House, The Green, Ealing. Sept. 6th.—Miss Gilpin received Linnet quite safe, and is well pleased with it." "22, Smith's Terrace, Mitcham, Sept. 14.—Sir,—Goldfinches arrived quite safe and am well pleased with them, and will send other orders shortly.—Yours, F. Tulty." "282, Portland Avenue, Langwith.—Sir,—Please send me a Goldfinch; a friend of mine told me what good birds you always send out.—Yours, J. Cutts." "22 Wilne Street, Leicester. — Sir,—Please send me selected Goldfinch. I had one from you earlier in the year, and was very pleased indeed with it.—Yours, W. Riley." "151, Penyrheolgerrig, Merthyr Tydvil.—Sir,—Please send the following. I have bought birds from you before, and always found them as advertised. — Yours, Howell Williams." "Simpson, near Bletchley.—Sir,—Please send the following. The Goldfinch I had last year turned out well.—Yours, E. Hollier." "50, Gossage Street, Widnes.—Sir,—The two Larks arrived safe, and give every satisfaction.—Yours, T. Oldfield." Hundreds of similar testimonials open to inspection any time. Please note all birds are guaranteed properly netted in County of Worcester, and are not lime caught Irish birds palmed off as Worcestershire caught birds. One trial will convince the most sceptical that my birds are exactly as represented. For cages, etc., see appliance column.

SILK'S CHAMPION NORWICH.

I have without doubt the finest collection of Norwich in England. Wonderful size, shape, and quality; some of the finest ever staged; fit for KEENEST COMPETITION. Last year I sold some of the STARS OF THE SEASON, including winners at SCOTTISH NATIONAL, GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, KILMARNOCK, NOTTINGHAM, PLYMOUTH, MANCHESTER, NORTHAMPTON, OXFORD, YORK, CLEATOR MOOR, and numerous other big shows, all in open competition. This is not bounce, but facts. Now is the time to purchase some champions. I have made the task of pleasing my customers easy through my facilities for giving very EXCEPTIONAL VALUE for money. The best value in the cage bird fancy I might very truthfully say; and spontaneous testimonials are constantly being received testifying to the value I give.

THREE OTHER FACTS WORTHY OF NOTICE.

I. This strain stands supreme.
II. I breed to sell.
III. Every bird on APPROVAL, CASH, or DEPOSIT.

State wants and price prepared to pay; satisfaction guaranteed.

ONLY A FEW . . .

but you have not seen . . . them . . . before

Because I never have to repeat the same; because what I publish are neither got by "Baits," nor are they "Flukes," as the immense quantities always open for inspection will at once prove.

Another Foreign Complimentary Letter

East London, South Africa.—Birds arrived safe, and am very pleased with them, especially the Lancashire. They are all in good health. The packing was perfect, and the cages very clean. It being my first order I was a bit timid and afraid to risk too much, but next time I send, which will not be long, I hope to send a larger and better order. Thanking you for the straightforward way you dealt with me.—E. L. Griffiths to W. Rudd.

159, Gloucester Road, Bishopston, Bristol. Sept. 24, 1907.—Would you kindly send another bottle of Asthmarine. The last small bottle has made splendid strides towards recovery with three Canaries.—C. Babington to W. Rudd.

Much admired.

15, Parnell Road, Bow, London, E., September 28, 1907.—Received the pair of Yorkshires yesterday in good condition. Quite satisfied. They were much admired. Many thanks.—C. Davidson to W. Rudd.

Good Value.

19, St. Andrew's Terrace, Mossend, Sept. 27, 1907.—Received York hen. Highly pleased with it. Believe you will receive lots of orders through me, seeing you send good value.—B. R. to W. Rudd.

93, Albert Street, Falls Road, Belfast, September 22, 1907.—I received the bird. Greatly pleased with it. It has sung that load this morning that you could hear it a very long way off. All our people are highly pleased with the bird and beauty of song and appearance.—E. J. Green to W. Rudd.

10, Greyhound Road, Pantdu, Clam., Sept. 22, 1907.—The Canary sent me arrived quite safe and is a grand bird. When I want more birds my order will be with you. The one thing I was afraid of was the colour. Other advertisers generally have some excuse respecting the colour, say what you may. Wishing you every success.—W. Mable to W. Rudd.

Repeat Order.

From Prof. Sir Hubert von Herkomer, C.V.O., R.A., D.C.L., etc., Sept. 23, 1907.—Mr. Rudd, please supply three bottles of Golden Bloom and Tonic Drops.

99, College Street, Chilvers, Coton, Nuneaton, Sept. 27, 1907.—Will you please forward me . . . . I am pleased to tell you that the Sib. hen I purchased from you has bred me light mules this season.—W. Dickin to W. Rudd.

Stanley Villa, Fishponds Road, Bristol, Sept. 20, 1907.—I beg to thank you again for the magnificent birds, especially the cock. I think him one of the best I have seen.—A. S. Bawn to W. Rudd.

Did not expect so good at price.

Scotland Road, West Byfleet, Sept. 24, 1907.—The Canary arrived quite safe. I am very pleased with it. I did not expect such a nice bird at such a small price.—W. Haskett to W. Rudd.

SINGING CONTESTS.

LEEDS.

Our weekly contest for Linnets was held at the King's Head, Shannon Street, when 26 of the best birds in Leeds sang for four good prizes, given by Mr. W. Tillottson. 1 Hardcastle, 2 Stead, 3 and 4 shared by W. Crowther and H. Greenwood. Judges: T. Summers and T. Hineson. Timekeeper, E. Worth.—T. SUMMERS, Hon. Sec.

LEWISHAM.

The usual weekly Linnet contest was held at the Coach and Horses, High Street, Lewisham on September 28th, at 7.30 p.m. The prizes competed for were three singing cages ranging in value. Five pair of birds were hung on the nail. Although they are improving in song, none were yet up to the usual standard. The winners were: 1, Austin, 1 score 11; 2, Emerton, 1 score 10; 3, Major, 1 score 2. The runners-up being Ingram and W. Austin.

BLACKBURN L.F.A.

There is every prospect of our having a thorough good, sound society, our membership now numbering upwards of 40. We held our first show on September 28th, at headquarters, the house of Mr. Harry Rothwell, The Good Samaritan Inn, Grimshaw Park. Being rather early in the season, the birds were not quite at their best, but notwithstanding there was a very good opening show, 25 birds competing for 10 prizes—5 for Fed Birds, and 5 for the wild class. The judge was Mr. Wellington Harwood, of Darwen, who gave general satisfaction with his decisions. Fed Class: 1 S. Fletcher, 2 R. Airey, 3 J. Abbot, 4 J. Sanderson, 5 J. Walmsley. Wild Class: 1 R. Hunt, 2 J. Entwistle, 3 J. Walmsley, 4 and 5 H. Ainsworth.—JOHN SHEFFIELD, Sec.

CLUB REPORTS.

LIVERPOOL BIRD BREEDERS ASSOCIATION.

Usual monthly meeting held September 12th, Mr. Handley in the chair. Schedule was fixed for the November old show (members), and arrangements made for cage-making competition at next meeting, October 10th, entries for same to be taken at the meeting. There will be 2 classes, Champions (which is to include any who are wood-workers by trade) and Novices. The prize and specials will be given for "simplicity, and suggestive ideas in the making." Mr. W. Thompson will act as judge.—H. BARRATT, Sec.

PLUMSTEAD, WOOLWICH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting was held on September 19th, at Trinity Schools. Mr. Best was elected delegate to the CAGE BIRDS Competition Committee. It was decided to alter the date of the next meeting from 17th to 24th October, as a number of members wished to attend Dulwich show. At this meeting, to which all are welcome, a demonstration of how to wash a Canary will be given by Mr. Meades, followed by a competition. Mr. Best having kindly offered a prize for the best-washed bird by a novice. The following were elected members, Mrs. Smith, Messrs. H. Bulgin, A. Booth, Daniels, Swift, Thorn, W. R. Wood, and H. Weaver. The membership now totals 32, but there is still room for a great many more. A lecture on the Norwich Plainhead was given by Mr. Hazell, followed by a discussion, during which many interesting points were brought forward and talked over for the benefit of all present. A vote of thanks to the lecturer brought the meeting to a close.—W. PAWLEY, Hon. Sec.

SCOTTISH CREST CLUB.

Committee meeting held September 28th. Members present were, Messrs. J. McLay, J. Young, C. Campbell, G. Shillinglaw, J. Munro, R. Adamson, W. Griffiths, and Secretary. A discussion took place regarding the colour of inside of show cage, and it was finally settled that the tint as used by Mr. Dewar be adopted as the correct one, which is light sky blue, and can be had from that gentleman at 1s. per tin. The regulation drinker was considered satisfactory—black outside, and the same colour inside as the inside of cages, any other colour will be disqualified. A post card from Mr. J. C. Wallace complained of the model on the medals; this was discussed at length, and it was agreed to ask the jeweller to improve the model. The membership list, which should have been closed on October 1st, was extended until October 12th, on which date it will be finally closed, and all not paid members by that time cannot compete in the young bird classes at the club show. The meeting agreed that specials for club show should be allotted by the president and secretary.—A. CHALMERS, Sec.

PENDLETON AND SALFORD O.S.

On September 23rd, at Chapel street Mission Hall, Mr. Barker Clegg gave a very interesting lecture on British Birds, before the members of the above society and a good number of friends. Mr. Clegg was asked a good number of questions, to which he answered very promptly. Our meeting nights are held every second and fourth Monday in each month, when new members can be made, and friends are always welcomed. On October 14 next Mr. Bladon will give us a lecture, to which all fanciers are invited.—W. JACKSON, Hon. Sec.

LLANELLY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held September 15th. Mr. D. R. Jones presided. Two new members were elected. It was decided to leave management of schedule, etc., until next meeting, September 28th. Re the letter published by Mr. Portsmouth, jun., in CAGE BIRDS, August 31st, under the heading "The Scourge of the Bird Room," we expected to see the above gentleman at our meeting, and prepared for a lecture on the above heading, but Mr. Portsmouth never came to the meeting at all. Mr. Lewis was present, but never made a special note on the subject, as promised to his friend, Mr. Portsmouth. Mr. Lewis is a member of the Society, and not secretary, as stated in Mr. Portsmouth's letter.—I. SIMON, Sec.

Y.C.C. OF IRELAND.

Committee meeting held at Douglas Hotel, Dublin, Mr. Devitt in the chair. Rules and classification for show arranged as follows: 22 classes for Yorkshires, 10 Norwich, 4 Scotch Fancy, 2 Belgian, 5, Mules and Hybrids, 8 British Birds, 6 Foreign Birds, 6 Selling, and 1 Gift. Under such a liberal classification fanciers should take advantage of same, and send in good entries when the time arrives. The committee decided to pay the rent of show-room in advance. The committee wish it to be made known that no member should send any birds to shows not under the patronage of the club. Mr. Michael Murphy, Dublin, was elected a member of the club.—W. C. SHARDLOW, Hon. Sec.

WELSH CAGE BIRD CLUB.

The committee met on September 23rd, at the Ship and Bell, Merthyr Tydfil. There was a good attendance, only four of the committeemen being absent. Mr. T. L. Castree was in the chair. One and all seemed to be brimful of go. Mr. W. Williams, Nelson, Glam., was elected a member of the club. It was decided to give the club's patronage to both Swansea shows, also to Llanelly C.B.S., and Merthyr and Dowlais. The secretary was given power to give the patronage to other societies complying with the rules and classification of the club. The committee selected a sub-committee, to fix a date, and draw up rules and prize-money for the proposed club show to be held at Mountain Ash, subject to decision of the general meeting to be held at Swansea show. A representative will be appointed to attend each show that receives the club's patronage, to look after the interest of the exhibits and exhibitors, also to see that the Novice birds are drawn out and judged for the Novice medals. The committee decided that the Novices shall have a fair fight between themselves for the medals, which is a step in the right direction. Now Novices, roll up and join us, we want your support, and we will help you. It was decided to accept the C.B.U. decision on what constitutes a Novice. The holders of the Leech Cups will be presented each year with a handsome medal. I should like to see some other good fancier or fanciers come forward and do as Mr. Leech has done, or even give us a medal or two to be won by the Novice gaining most points during the season. After about four hours' hard work, the treasurer, Mr. Jones, gave us a treat in the way of an entertainment with his gramophone. He has, no doubt, the best set of records in South Wales. This was appreciated by all, and a hearty vote of thanks was passed to our host. Those who have not paid their subs. should do so at once. There is still room on the ledgers for new members, the sub. is only 2s. 6d. per annum, paid in advance.—D. H. TEDSTONE, Hon. Sec., 4, George Street, Brecon.

CITY & SUBURBAN A.C.B.

The second best attended meeting this year took place on September 23rd, to take part in a judging competition in Norwich Plainheads. New members elected: Messrs. F. Moore and R. S. Hamlin; nominated, Messrs. G. B. Lewis, J. Hughes, and R. Allen. A letter from a recently-elected member, touching on show rule 13, proved highly important, and no less than 14 members took part in the discussion. The balance-sheet of the young bird show, duly audited, showing a profit of 14s. 8d., was confirmed as read, the secretary giving statistics of the same ranging over a period of five years. In unanimously electing Mr. A. W. Hart (that adept at stage making and erecting) staging steward—a post vacant by the resignation of Mr. L. Daintry—many were the high compliments paid him for his untiring services. A handsome silver-plated cup for competition amongst the novice Crest and Crested-bred breeders, presented by Mr. A. Lazarus, was on view, and made a most pleasing impression on the would-be winners. Samples in three colours of the newly-acquired diplomas were also on view, giving general satisfaction, but the question of the disposition of the same was postponed until the next meeting. The judging competition of Norwich Plainheads then took place, 30 members taking part, with Mr. G. E. Weston as final judge. Upon the completion the winning birds were brought out, when Mr. Weston gave a masterly exposition upon their respective merits, which was listened to with wrapt attention, especially from the large body of novices present. At the close many questions were asked, and replied to to the satisfaction of all. Messrs. W. Prance (champion), T. Cox (amateur), and W. Page and W. Shepherd (novices) secured the silver medals. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Weston, to which he suitably replied. A pleasant feature of the evening was the reappearance of Mr. A. W. Curtis, after an absence of 11 weeks; warm and cordial were the greetings extended him on all hands.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

DERBY CAGE BIRD CLUB.

Meeting September 28th. Mr. J. H. Drakely presided. The business before the meeting was the special prizes for open classes, and after discussing the same it was proposed and seconded that the Society give point specials in the same way as last year. It was announced that in addition to the patronage already reported, that they had been favoured with the Crested Canary Club's support. After other important business was transacted in connection with the Jubilee Show, the secretary was instructed to proceed with the schedule and other printing at once.—W. H. BAMSEY, hon. sec.

SECRETARIES should read page 206 carefully.

THE SHOWS.

BIDEFORD.

Members' show held in connection with the Poultry and Pigeon Show; some very good exhibits were staged. Mr. G. Loosmore judged, and his awards seemed to give very good satisfaction. CRESTS: 1, 2, Priscott. YORKSHIRES: 1, Symons; 2, 3, Grilliths. A.O.V.: 1, Priscott; 2, Symons, 3, Hughes. Finch: 1, Davy, Bramble; 2, Priscott, Bullfinch; 3, 4, Hughes, a Chaffinch and a Bramble. MULE: 1, Priscott; 2, Davy. A very nice variegated Mule was shown in this class by A. Symons, but unfortunately, it being a young bird class, and Mr. Symons' bird being an old one, it was marked w.c.

GREAT HORTON GOOD INVENT.

The third of a series of members' shows was held on September 28 at the Church Schools. Mr J. Dawson judged, and gave general satisfaction. Fifty birds were staged, some of which will be heard of later in open competition. YELLOW YORKS.: 1, Birbeck; 2, 4, Kay; 3, Atkin. BUFF: 1, Newell; 2, 3, Holden; 4, Brook. TICKED or UNEVENLY MARKED YELLOW: 1, Rushworth; 2, Birbeck; 3, Brook; 4, Riley. BUFF: 1, Atkin; 2, Holden; 3, Kay; 4, Riley. CIN. MARKED YELLOW: 1, Oldfield. BUFF: 1, Oldfield; 2, Brook; 3, Newell. YELLOW HEN: 1, Frith; 2, Newell; 3, Kay; 4, Rushworth. BUFF: 1, Brook; 2, Holden; 3, Schofield; 4, Birbeck. CIN. MARKED YELLOW HEN: 1, Holden; 2, Oldfield; 3, Newell. BUFF: 1 Atkin; 2, Holden. HEAVILY VAR.: 1, Schofield 2, 4, Atkin; 3, Frith.

KILMAURS.

The Kilmaurs Fur and Feather Fanciers' Society held their third annual open show on September 25th, in the Public Hall. The weather conditions were all that could be desired—an ideal summer's day—which contributed largely to the turn-out of visitors who patronised the show. There was a fair classification throughout, and the response in the number of entries was very good. The feature of interest was in great measure the cage bird section of the show, Norwich and Borders being a good class. Other classes in the British sections were very fair, some of the exhibits were of outstanding merit. The officials were, hon. pres., J. G Findlay, Esq.; pres., G. J. Wilson, Esq.; vice-pres., Bailie James Montgomerie; patronesses, Mrs. J G. Findlay, Mrs. G. J. Wilson; committee, Messrs. W. Gibson, J. Rowan, William Gray, J. Roy, R. Paterson, R. Dunlop, J. Fleming, T. Gemmill, H Lang, J. Gourlay, P. Gilmour, J. Morton, J. Cunnings. Judges: Canaries, Mr. Allan Robert, Thornliebanks; British, Mr. Gavin Alston. Show secretaries, Messrs. Faulds and Fleming, Mr. Fleming being secretary for the cage bird sections. The entries for cage birds were slightly in excess of last year, and the quality all over very good. The judges' awards were well received. Mr. Fleming had a difficult task before him, and his duties were carried out faithfully and well. Of even temper, courteous, and obliging, Mr. Fleming is the embodiment of an ideal secretary. The Public Hall is well suited for a general show, ample room, plenty of light, and free of draughts. The cage bird sections claimed the attentions of a large portion of the visitors, being well patronised during the day. Scotch Fancies were again conspicuous by their absence, not a single Scotch Fancy being staged. We venture to suggest that if a few Scoteb Fancy classes were added, it would lend greater interest to the show. With proper inducements offered by the management, Scotch Fancy breeders would no doubt make a hearty response. Mr. Fleming was ably assisted by a hard-working committee, and everything was in apple-pie order. There were no catalogues this year, the management, in place of catalogues, bad cards with exhibitors names and the awards in the different classes attached to the pens, but the want of catalogues was very much felt by visitors and exhibitors alike. Not a few of the principal breeders of Norwich and Border Fancies were to be seen. The management are well pleased with results for 1907 and there being one or two new office-bearers this year, no doubt the experience gained at this time will bear good fruit for the show of 1908. EAST BOWLING B.F.A.

Members' show held September 28th at their clubroom, Barley Mow. The entry was good, 79 birds being staged, and some noted past winners put on the benches to be judged. The points gained at this show count for medals and other prizes which are put up for competition. We have commenced a competition for Novices, which will have three medals, one gold, two silver, and this is the first show for them. Mr. T. Ogden officiated as judge, and gave every satisfaction. ACCRINGTON.

Accrington and District C.B.S. held their annual open show on September 27th and 28th, in the Liberal Club. The Assembly Room proved a very suitable place for the purpose, very comfortable and light, and having the excellent feature of being only a minute's walk from the station. We regret to say, however, that entries came up badly, no doubt owing to the show being held so early in the season. The society, in consequence, feel very strongly against the Cage Bird Union's action in refusing them as members if they stuck to the dates originally fixed, viz., October 18th and 19th, this being the reason they were compelled to hold their show so early. The officials say they still fail to see why the Union should not have allowed them to keep to their original dates, as they are 22½ miles from Rochdale; also that if it had not been for the fact that several of their members were also members of other societies affiliated to the Union, they would have held their show without the patronage of the C.B.U., for they felt confident that if they had done so the show would have been a success, whereas through having it so early they will sustain a loss into the teens of pounds. It seemed the general opinion that the action of the Union is much to be regretted, and that it will leave a very bad impression on the minds of the Accrington and District Fanciers as to its merits. Be that as it may, a meeting was held after the close of the show, and next year's show was fixed for October 16th and 17th, 1908, so that the C.B.U. will have plenty of notice of the Accrington dates this time. Coming to the birds themselves, the Norwich were not, as a whole, up to Accrington's usual standard, although the specimens which Messrs. Godley, Seed, Fowler, Evans, Tweddle, and Wade had on view will be found hard nuts to crack wherever they may go. Yorkshires were a very level lot, and some exceptionally promising birds were staged by Messrs. Reed, Lane, Ellis, Wear, Dykes, and Hirst. Cinnamons came up fairly well considering that the season is so early, the birds exhibited by Messrs. Godley, Dormer and Wilson being very meritorious, and including some of their well-known winners of the past. In the A.O.V. class the Crest-bred exhibited by Mr. Godley is a bird of exceptional merit, and should want some stopping in its own section. In the British Birds Mr. Underwood's Waxwing was a very fine specimen, and well deserved its place, as also did Mr. T. Johnson's grand coloured Bramblefinch. We were sorry to learn that the exhibits of Mr. C. Hunt (Leeds), and Mr. W. G. Pool (Stratford-on-Avon) arrived too late for competition. Mr. Harwood makes a grand secretary, having everything in first-class order, and we must congratulate both him, Mr. J. Trengove, Mr. A. Hirst, and the other members on the admirable and smart way in which the birds were despatched home on the closing night. The officials responsible for the excellent arrangements were: President and chairman, Councillor J. Smith J.P.; vice-chairmen, Messrs. A. Hirst and W. Dormer; treasurer, Mr. J. O'Brien; committee, Messrs. P. Ferguson, J. Rooney, S. Lowden, A. Taylor, J. Trengrove, W. Wade, J. O. Croston, J. T. Dean, M. Ragan, E. Reddy, W. Walsh, J. W. Philpott, R. Haydock, C. Taylor, E. Godley, W. Stirling, G. Pollard, R. Drinkwater, H. Riding, J. Wilson, R. Haworth, J. Almond, W. Smith, D. Crossley, J. G. Preston, and R. Seed; hon. secretary, Mr. D. Harwood. It is to be regretted the show was not a success, as the members are all true fanciers, and certainly deserve better support, both from exhibitors and the general public—let us hope their next venture may be crowned with complete success. Mr. J. Robson judged.

Norwich.

CLEAR YELL. (5): 1, 3, spl, Godley, leader big bouncing bird, good, rich, solid colour, grand head, neck and chest, hardly ready yet, 3rd, grand colour and quality, good head and neck, hardly as stout as winner; 2, Sherrington, red-hot colour, grand feather and types well cut away, trifle smaller, well staged; 4, Adnitt and Driver, nice substance, loses little feather and colour to leaders; vhc, Tweddle. BUFF (8): 1, spl, Seed, with the well-known "Little King II.," looking as well, if not better, than ever, wonderful type, grand colour and quality, put down in the pink of condition; 2, Coventry, another grand bird, well mealed, superior quality, grand type, loses a little in colour; 3, Adnitt and Driver, good substance, fine head, neck and chest, grand colour, trifle longer; 4, Godley, similar bird to 3rd, grand colour and quality; vhe, J. and J. Hopkins; he, Smith; e, Sutton. TICK ETC., YELL. (7): 1, spl, Fowler, thigh tick., rare colour, good size and shape, but we thought rather lucky, hotly pressed by 2, Evans, another thigh-ticked, better type and feather, big, bouncing bird, well packed wings and tail, well aeross perch, good one; 3, Godley, wing marked, grand colour and type, well up in size, loses a little in quality; 4, Trengove, another thigh tick, grand size and colour, good quality, hardly ready yet, should do a lot of winning when lit; vhe, Adnitt and Driver; he, Mather, c, Godley. BUFF (19): 1, spl, Evans, ticked on front of head, grand size and colour, fine head and neck, extra good body, splendid quality, real good one; 2, Braybrook, mkd. eyes, neck and wings, another fine chubby bird, grand carriage, nice colour and quality, a good second; 3, Hayhurst, neck and wing mkr., another good exhibit, grand colour, beaten a little in type; 4, Winckley, eyes and wing mkd., good colour and size, loses quality; vhc, Hirst; he, Sherrington; e, Trengove. YELL. HEN (5): 1, spl, Tweddle, clear, splendid quality and colour, good type, grand carriage, put down in A1 style; 2, Sutton, neck mkd., unflighted, good colour, extra quality, grand body, but fails a shade on head and neck; 3, Mather, very heavily varieg., natural colour, good type and quality; 4, Evans, clear, nice quality and type, shade patchy in colour, which, no doubt ,told against it; vhc, Wilson. BUFF HEN (17), good class: 1, Hyde's spl, Evans, clear, extra colour and meal, grand shape and size, good head, neck and chest, lovely quality, bonny hen; 2, 3, Mercer, leader eye and wing, mkd. unflig., well up in size, grand colour, good type, little behind in quality, 3, clear unfligh., good-shaped body, nice colour and quality, little pinched in head and neck; 4, Sutton, clear, unfligh., grand colour, type and quality, but similar failing; vhc, Tweddle, clear, grand colour, hardly so good in body as leaders; hc, Godley; c, Stubbs. YELL. UNFLIGH. (11): 1, spl, Seed, clear, grand colour, size and shape, good head and neck, all front, not quite fined down yet, promising youngster; 2, Lees, grand colour, extra quality and type, good carriage, perhaps hardly as stout as leader; 3, Wade, another clear, grand-bodied bird, rich in colour, fails a little in head and neck, but very good all round; 4, Brumby and Stone, another presumably clear, rattling substance, nice wings and tail, good quality, nice level colour, but not the depth of those above it; vhc, Sutton; hc, Howarth; c, Braybrook. BUFF (25): 1, spl, Wade, clear, grand substance, extra short and cobby, rare colour, good head and full, short neck, nice quality, full of true Norwich properties; 2, Mercer, wing mkd., equally good colour, lovely quality, hardly the substance of winner, yet a good second; 3, Lees, clear, smaller, but all there for type and quality, grand colour, and staged to perfection; 4, Lingard, another clear, grand colour, and quality, shade longer; vhc, Godley, another clear, nice exhibit, close up; hc, Sheldon; c, Davies, Coulson, and Bradley.

Yorkshires.

CLEAR YELL. (19): 1, spl, Reed, unfligh., grand length and colour, nice back, wings and tail well-cut away, stands well, good quality; 2, Spencer, long, slim, typical bird, grand quality, well on legs and stands to perfection, very close race; 3, Binns, hardly as long, but grand type and quality, feathered to perfection, nice colour and style; 4, Ackroyd, another unfligh., superior quality and colour, well up on leg, inclined to cross wings a little, still, a bonny bird; vhc, Howarth; he, Hirst; c, Wagstaff. BUFF (16): 1, spl, Lane, unflgh., magnificent feather, straight as a pencil, grand round back, lovely wing carriage, nice pipe tail, shown in A1 style, well selected; 2, Wilcock, another rattling specimen, brimful of quality, beautiful back, wings and tail, nice length, grand position, close up; 3, Riley, well-drawn, good length and quality, stands to perfection, worth its place; 4, Dykes, very similar bird to third, perhaps not so good in neck, still a true Yorkshire; vhc, Binns, not quite fined down yet, will improve; he, Rooney; c, Crossley. TICKED YELL. (10): 1, spl, Ellis, slight grizzle on head, rattling feather, rare length, grand colour and stand, full of nerve and style, real good; 2, Lane, thigh-ticked, unflgh., soft, silky feather, nice length, good colour, rare shape, not quite at its best; 3, Wilcock, another unflgh., thigh-tick, nice length, grand back, wings and tail, rattling type and quality; 4, J. and J. Hopkins, unflgh., ticked head and root of tail; vhc, Wilcock; he, Whiting; c, Edmondson. BUFF (17): 1, spl, Ellis, cap mkd., rare length, teeming with quality, grand back, wings and tail, nice colour, good position; 2, Riley, slight grizzle on shoulder, grand length, nicely-folded wings, neat pipe tail, stands well, inclined to be a little rough at thigh; 3, Wear, another bird of grand length and position, beautiful quality and type; 4, Binns, really typical Yorkshire, feather like wax, well-filled back, best of wings and tail, not one of the largest, but one of the best; vhc, Halliday, another grand bird, magnificent quality, fully deserves its position; he, Foden; c, Hirst. YELL. HEN (12): 1, 2, spl, Wear, brace of beauties, both clears, shining like silk, slim, well-drawn birds, straight as darts, two magnificent hens, second an unflighted; 3, Bail, face and wing Cin. mkd., superior quality and type, rattling position, grand back, wings and tail, a good third; 4, vhc, Lane, another clear, good size and shape, grand quality and position hardly so full in neck; he, and c, Edmondson. BUFF HENS (12): 1, spl, Dykes, grand coloured, unflgh., neat head, good, full neck, nice back, wings and tail, nice quality and position; 2, Riley, hardly the length, but teeming with quality, beautiful type and position, extra clean underneath, and standing on clever legs, true Yorks. and close up; 3, Hirst, plenty of length, good shape and quality, nice back, well-packed wings and tail; 4, Halliday, Cin.-ticked wing, magnificent quality and colour, grand type, bonny hen, and well worth its place; vhc, Aekroyd; he, Spencer; e, Smith.
